"Pink Tooth Brush"... with the help of Ipana and Massage!

A Product of Bristol-Myers Company

Q. What, exactly, is "Pink Tooth Brush"?

A. "Pink Tooth Brush"—a recurring tinge of "pink" on your brush is a signal of distress from your gums—a sign that they are weak and sensitive.

Q. What have weak gums to do with bright, sparkling teeth?

A. A great deal! In fact, the brightness and sparkle of your teeth...yes, and the charm of your smile...depend largely on the health of your gums. That is why you should give your gums as well as your teeth constant, every day care.

Q. How can gums be given this proper care?

A. Dentists everywhere recommend daily gum massage. For today's soft foods deny gums the natural work they need for healthy firmness. They must have more exercise—more stimulation—and massage provides that extra work.

Q. What should be done about "Pink Tooth Brush"?

A. See your dentist. It may not mean serious trouble, but only your dentist can decide that. He may recommend more work for your lazy gums. And like thousands of dentists, his advice may be "the daily stimulation of Ipana and massage."

Q. Why Ipana?

A. Because Ipana Tooth Paste is specially designed to do more than clean teeth thoroughly, brilliantly. With massage, Ipana aids the gums to better health. That's why Ipana and massage is so effective in helping to keep gums healthier...in guarding against "pink tooth brush"!

"PROTECTING THE AMERICAN HOME"

Two small children of a Vermont pioneer alone for the day, discovered that a bear had invaded the cabin and was in the cellar at the pork barrel. The bear, hearing the children above, scrambled up the ladder just as the boy slammed down the heavy hatch which caught him by the neck. The children added their weight to the door until the bear in his struggles kicked over the ladder and hung himself.

Danger still Prowls

In pioneer days, the physical dangers which threatened the home were no more real than the dangers today which threaten every home that is not armed against financial insecurity.

Every father of growing children must sooner or later face the question, "What would happen to my young family if anything suddenly should happen to me?"

There is a form of life insurance—National Life's Family Income Policy—which is especially designed to give your wife and children a guaranteed monthly income during the critical years when your children are dependent.

To see how it works, read the example at the right. Fortunately, this kind of life insurance is not expensive. Between the ages of 25 to 45, it will cost you only a few dollars more than ordinary life insurance. Why not look into it? Use the coupon below.

An Example

of how National Life's Family Income Policy may work for you

Suppose you should die suddenly, what would your wife and children receive? Illustration: Insured's age, 35. Sum insured, $10,000. Family Income, 20 year plan. Suppose death occurs five years after the policy takes effect. The National Life of Vermont will pay your wife:

1. $100 a month for the remaining 15 years of the "20 year plan" ..... $18,000
2. At the end of the Family Income Period, the sum of 10,000
Total ..... $28,000
3. If you outlive these maximum needs, the policy through dividend accumulations may be made to mature as an endowment to provide you with a retirement income.

Clapper's Americans

Sirs:

I am somewhat in agreement with the first part of Raymond Clapper's recent article, "Why Can't Americans Believe in America?" (LIFE, Oct. 27). It is true that the average European regards America and things American with awe, admiration, respect and fear.

The second part, asking America's unselfish participation in obtaining for the world "surcease from war," is pure bunk, hokum, balderdash. It is the same old 1916-17 stuff hashed over, redone and dished up.

I am a veteran of the "war to end war," the "war to make the world safe for democracy." On Nov. 11, 1918, I stood 28 kilometers from Brussels, Belgium, 18 years of age, a corporal, one of the survivors of a division which had suffered 14,000 casualties. Victory was ours! All the world's ills or fancied ills could now be cured—and easily.

Two years later, in an election in which I was still unable to vote, America rejected the League of Nations, collective security, and all that we had fought for through mud, blood and shellfire.

There is nothing to indicate that any of the Clapper visionary, idealistic heights can or will be achieved.

ARTHUR LONG

Pottsville, Pa.

Sirs:

I must take issue with Mr. Clapper on his hypothesis that Americans have no faith in America and as a natural consequence fear and distrust all foreign nations, most of all Herr Hitler. I believe that many Americans are thinking along lines that will soon disprove Mr. Clapper's hypothesis. To illustrate, I shall set forth my own beliefs, some of which at least I know to be shared by other average Americans.

First of all, due to our failure to assume world leadership and our just share of the responsibility entailed by that role at the end of World War I, our participation in the next major European war has always been inevitable. Secondly, I have always sincerely believed that Hitler's cause in the final analysis was hopeless. I still believe it. There is no hostile nation nor combination of hostile nations capable of winning an all-out war with America. We will win this war when Americans become convinced of the necessity of waging all-out war. They were badly disillusioned after World War I and now demand not only military victory but also a definite post-war goal.

Every realist knows that a huge expeditionary force, probably to the Near East, is a necessary development; that 75% of American industry must be producing war material—not the present 15%. America will be forced by events beyond her control to become the greatest military power the world has ever seen and, as victor, will be unable to shirk her destined burden.

Our world responsibility for the next several centuries is as certain as the orbits of the planets and the rising of tomorrow's sun. It will be the greatest era of peace and prosperity in recorded history, maintained by force applied with that justice known only to those confident of their power and reared in the spirit of fair play. In that era there will be no great wealth, no abject poverty. There will be tolerance of the faiths and ways of life of others, and individual freedom within limits prescribed by the welfare of others. This world is no idealist's dream; within ten years it will be a reality. It will be no Utopia—it will have its flaws—but it will give a more satisfactory existence to a greater number of people than any civilization within the memory of man.

Uncle Sam has no inferiority complex. He has the confidence that only irresistible strength can give. American reluctance to enter the struggle is not based on fear. Once Americans are convinced, once they see the goal, no power on earth can stop them. Americans do believe in America!

He didn't fill his pockets with hors d'oeuvres or drink out of his saucer . . . it was worse than that!

He didn't play leap-frog with the butler or pinch the maid . . . it was worse than that!

He didn't set his highball down on the hostess's prize antique ($800 to you) or mistake her sister for an old Follies' girl he'd met in Scranton . . . it was worse than that!

He did none of these things, but before the evening was over he was just as much an outcast as if he had done them all. And he wasn't thrown out, either. But a lot of people privately thought it would be a good idea. Despite his good looks and pleasing personality, nobody wanted to see him again—ever! And he didn't know why.

No matter what your good points may be, they can count for little if you have halitosis (bad breath). Socially and in business, it is the offense unbearable. If you ever came face-to-face with it, you can readily understand why.

Anyone can have this all too common condition at sometime or other. And the worst of it is, you yourself may not know when you're guilty. Your breath might be off color at this very moment, with nobody to put you wise; people don't discuss so intimate a subject.

Why take chances of offending others when there's an easy, delightful precaution against it? Simply rinse the mouth with Listerine Antiseptic on arising, before retiring, and between times before business and social engagements. This wonderful antiseptic and deodorant really does things for you!

While some cases of halitosis (bad breath) may be due to systemic disorders, the major cause, say some authorities, is the fermentation of tiny food particles on tooth, mouth, and gum surfaces.

Mignon in Mid-air

Sirs:

Pictures in LIFE, Oct. 27, of the Martells and Mignon were of unusual interest to me because about two years ago I tried to get some remotely similar camera effects of this team tossing the young lady over an automobile.

I did not, of course, have the benefit of Professor Edgerton's high-speed equipment, but used a 4x5 Graflex, making one exposure each time the feat was performed. It was necessary for the Martells to throw Mignon over the roof of the car about 20 times before I could get enough satisfactory shots to fit into proper sequence. Here is one shot from the sequence.

Good Division

Sirs:

How refreshing to read "A Good Soldier" (LIFE, Oct. 27). Thousands of us old veterans of the U. S. Regulars of World War I days feel a surge of pride in the record and capabilities of Private First Class Bill Brady. But, to a veteran of the Second Division, your discussion of the record of the First Division seems exaggerated.

Specifically, the First Division did not alone, as suggested by this article, "swing the tide of battle at Soissons," because as is shown by the following extract from the History of the Second Division, we were also there.

"The First and Second American Divisions, with the First French Moroccan Division between them, were employed as the spearhead of the main attack, driving directly eastward, through the most sensitive portion of the German lines, to the heights south of Soissons. The advance began on July 18 without the usual brief warning of a preliminary bombardment, and these three divisions at a single bound broke through the enemy's infantry defenses. A general withdrawal from the Marne was immediately begun by the enemy. . . . Due to the magnificent dash and power displayed in the field of Soissons by our First and Second Divisions, the tide of war was definitely turned in favor of the Allies."

Our record wasn't bad either at Château-Thierry, Belleau Wood, Vaux, St.-Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne.

"Our Second Division is second to none."

High-School Sororities

Sirs:

May I ask you to give a word of further explanation on your article "LIFE Goes to a Sorority Rush Week" (LIFE, Oct. 27)? Are the sororities given any recognition, official or semi-official, by the high-school administration? What does the school do for girls too poor for such affiliations?

I hope to hear that the school dissociates itself completely from this nonsense and encourages a much simpler and more democratic school life for adolescents.

ALLEGRA WOODWORTH
Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Sirs:

The Board of Education of the city of Atlanta and the high-school principals are very much opposed to high-school sororities and fraternities. We believe that this type of high-school social organization is undemocratic, creates snobishness and develops attitudes and ideals which are not for the best interest of high-school youth.

The Atlanta Board of Education has for a long time outlawed sororities and fraternities. The following excerpt from rules and regulations of our Board contains the official statement of our attitude:

"Secret high-school fraternities and sororities of a social nature in the junior and senior high schools are looked upon with disfavor by the Board. The superintendent, principals and teachers are instructed to manifest their disapproval of these organizations, and to inform the parents that the Board specifically disavows all responsibility. . . . The school publications shall not contain pictures, news stories, or announcements of the activities of social fraternities or sororities."

Salem Witches

Sirs:

In your review of All That Money Can Buy (LIFE, Oct. 27) you tell the story of Judge Hathorne (he did not use the "w" as did his famous descendant, Nathaniel) and repeat a common and serious misstatement of American history. You speak of witches being "burned at Salem."

As a matter of fact, though various witches were executed not only at Salem but at other places and times, there is no record of any witch ever having been burned in Colonial New England. If my memory serves me right 19 men and women were hung and one, Giles Corey, was pressed to death for refusing to plead.

New York has the dubious honor of infamous executions "at the stake" much later than the witchcraft excitement in Massachusetts. In 1741-44 various Negroes and some disreputable whites were accused of an arson plot to destroy the city of New York—as hysterical and unfounded a delusion as the witchcraft scare—with the result that, in addition to the imposition of numerous other sentences, 14 Negroes were actually burned to death.

Student Rebellion

Sirs:

Your article about the Georgia student rebellion against Governor Talmadge's efforts to tyrannize their educational institutions (LIFE, Oct. 27) reminds me of a similar incident that occurred at North Dakota State College during the spring of 1937 when I was a student there. Senator Langer, then Governor of the State, created the same kind of chaos, firing department heads and demoralizing teaching staffs.

The students reacted immediately with street and campus demonstrations, including a pamphlet air raid on college and city. During the next summer and autumn we brought Governor Langer's highhanded actions before the people with an initiative measure, forbidding the Governor to remove any faculty member in any State institution without the approval of the Board of Education. As one of the hottest issues in the election campaign, the measure was passed by a large majority.

Let Georgia students heed our example.

As to the bricklayers: no machine can align a wall, set a window header, build a foundation pillow, or form an external or internal corner.

As to the hod carriers: the mixing machine has played an important part in the hod carrier's career, but has not yet hurt him. The wheelbarrow has hurt the hod carrier some, as common laborers handle them on jobs when permissible. But the old dependable method, with the hod, is more practicable.

As to the plasterers: nothing has been found to replace plastered walls. Their endurance will speak for itself. The Last Supper was painted on a plastered wall. The finer things in buildings are obtainable only through the ancient method, hand-applied mortar. The virtues of plastering will live forever—a trade that still functions on the ancient traits of our ancestors.

Why we should conserve

1 CUT DOWN FATIGUE. Army shoes equipped with non-slip, long-wearing, shock-absorbent U. S. Rubber soles and heels help to keep soldiers foot-happy and fast-stepping on long marches.

2 GUARD AGAINST GAS. The Army's new-type gas mask with its non-kinking U. S. Rubber tube assures soldiers an adequate supply of purified air under all gas warfare conditions.

3 KEEP MEN WARM AND DRY. U. S. Rubber raincoats and waterproof boots, gaiters, overshoes and rubbers protect the health of U. S. soldiers in snow, ice, rain and mud.

4 MAKE TANKS MORE COMFORTABLE. Pads of Koyalon* (U. S. Rubber's new cushioning material) soften the steel interiors of new, fast-moving tanks; save tank crews many a bump and bruise.

5 MOVE ANTI-TANK GUNS FASTER. Tough U. S. Rubber tires give anti-tank guns top speed and maneuverability over flat or rough terrain; permit modern, flexible anti-tank defense.

6 SEND MESSAGES QUICKER. Portable radio telephones, and U. S. Rubber Laytex* insulated assault wire keep isolated field units in constant, instant touch with G. H. Q.

7 SPEED UP MOTORCYCLE TROOPS. Moving at high speed over rough ground, motorcycle troops go into action fast on powerful machines equipped with tough, long-mileage U. S. Rubber tires.

8 PROTECT PARACHUTE JUMPERS. Koyalon* seat and back cushions in the parachute harness make landings safer. Air-tight synthetic rubber coverings turn these cushions into life preservers.

9 SAVE FLYERS' LIVES. Though riddled by bullets which rip its metal shell, so efficient are U. S. Rubber's new self-sealing gas tanks that no gasoline escapes, no fire can start.

"Pressure Groups" is a simple and expressive work. Note that Congress still wears a bleary grin and seems anxious to make all hands happy. Glove company supplied Sundelof with the hands

"Farm Parity" shows Congress cheerfully holding up food prices at expense of manufactured products. Vegetables are women's hat ornaments. League has urged farm aid be cut in half.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .

Herbert George William Sundelof is a small, earnest, dry-mannered man whose great passion is to interest the public in what he sometimes calls "the drab and dismal facts of the economic scene." He is executive director of the National Economy League, founded in 1932 to campaign for lower expenditures by the Federal Government. Since 1932 Federal expenditures have risen from five to an estimated 25 billions. But the League still keeps up a brave rearguard action, is now urging Congress to save a billion or so by abolishing WPA and cutting non-defense expenses.

In his vain efforts to make U. S. citizens economy-conscious, versatile Mr. Sundelof has tried cartoons, graphs dressed up with drooping American eagles, bright-colored pamphlets, and his own poetry. Sample:

*The reason, I gather, that nobody hears
Our cries about debt is we're up to our ears.*

The clever table-top photographs on these pages are his latest idea for dramatizing his cause. He calls them Photo-Cartoons and is making good use of them in the League's propaganda work. The titles are his.

"Boom" depicts with deadly accuracy the course that Congress has followed on Inflation—just holding its ears and waiting. Sundelof plans to make use of this idea for his own Christmas card.

In "Simple Arithmabet" Congress tries again to learn an old, old lesson it has never quite grasped. Mortar board is one of half-dozen hats Sundelof has bought or made for his hero.

"Did I tell you girls how these cards were presented to my father by Admiral Dewey?"

One of the ladies is wondering, dully, how long the Admiral used them. Her partner is thinking of his famous words: "You may fire when you're ready, Gridley." (The third one just wants to go home.)

WHEN YOU FEEL the need of a laxative, don't delay: take speedy Sal Hepatica. It usually acts within an hour. Acts in a natural way, without discomfort or griping; acts gently by attracting needed liquid bulk to the intestinal tract.

No wonder 3 out of 5 physicians, recently interviewed, recommend Sal Hepatica. Try this speedy, sparkling saline the very next time you need a laxative!

Sal Hepatica—keep in mind—does something more. It is decidedly helpful in counteracting excess gastric acidity. Helps turn a sour stomach sweet again.

IN TRINIDAD

by TREVOR L. CHRISTIE

Last week the U. S. Navy announced that by early next year all eight of the Navy's new lease-lend bases in the Atlantic will be ready for service. These bases will supplement those traditional ones, like Guantánamo and San Juan, already in use. Thus the eastern U. S. will be protected by a sturdy girdle stretching from subarctic Newfoundland to tropical British Guiana and as far out to sea as Iceland, 2,000 miles offshore.

One new lease-lend base where both the Navy and Army are setting up shop is Trinidad, the subject of this report.

The new U. S. bases at Trinidad are not very far along, but the Navy establishment is farther advanced than the Army's. It is only fair to add also that no major mistake has been made in the opinion of competent observers. There have been slight delays on the part of every group involved, including the Trinidad government and Washington, but it should be remembered that the Navy base was not scheduled for completion until January 1942, and the Army base for October 1942, and neither is far behind schedule. Uncle Sam didn't start at scratch in Trinidad—he started well back of scratch

A year ago, Mr. Henry E. Wilhelmi feared he might have to give up his business or take a lower-salaried job in which hearing wasn't vital. As general manager of the Motor Car Supply Co., Chicago, Ill., he did most of his firm's buying. And straining all day long to hear what salesmen said was getting to be too much for him.

His hearing was growing steadily worse. His family avoided talking to him. "It broke my heart," said Mrs. Wilhelmi, "to see him come home every night dog-tired and depressed, and go off by himself with a book."

"But Henry kept putting it off. He'd talk about hearing aids, and once he did go and look at a Sonotone, but that was all. So one night, I invited a Sonotone man to our home."

"TO LOVE, HONOR AND OBEY"... AND HEAR!

THERE'LL BE better hearing in America when more people realize there are two sides to every hearing loss. The general attitude, of course, has always been that a man's hearing loss was his own personal business . . . and nobody else's.

But when you get a chance to look inside the private life of a married couple like the Henry Wilhelmis of River Forest, Ill., and see how thoroughly one person's hearing troubles can upset another person's whole life . . . why, then, you begin to realize that hearing isn't just a personal matter but a very serious social obligation!

And you may even go further, and begin to wonder if there isn't considerable truth in Mrs. Wilhelmi's contention that a hard of hearing husband hasn't the right to stay deaf!

Certainly there is no escaping the fact that one man's hearing loss is everybody else's loss. And the growing recognition of the hard of hearing person's responsibilities to other people is one of the most encouraging signs in this battle for better hearing. For once a man realizes how unfair it is to stay deaf and do nothing about it, he's half-way down the road to better hearing!

Today that road is open for anyone who wants to travel it. Today, there is scarcely a hard of hearing person in America who cannot have help, and the very latest scientific help . . . if he wants it! For the unremitting research that Sonotone has carried on for 12 years has brought so many improvements in hearing aids that close to 95% of the deafened can be helped to better hearing.

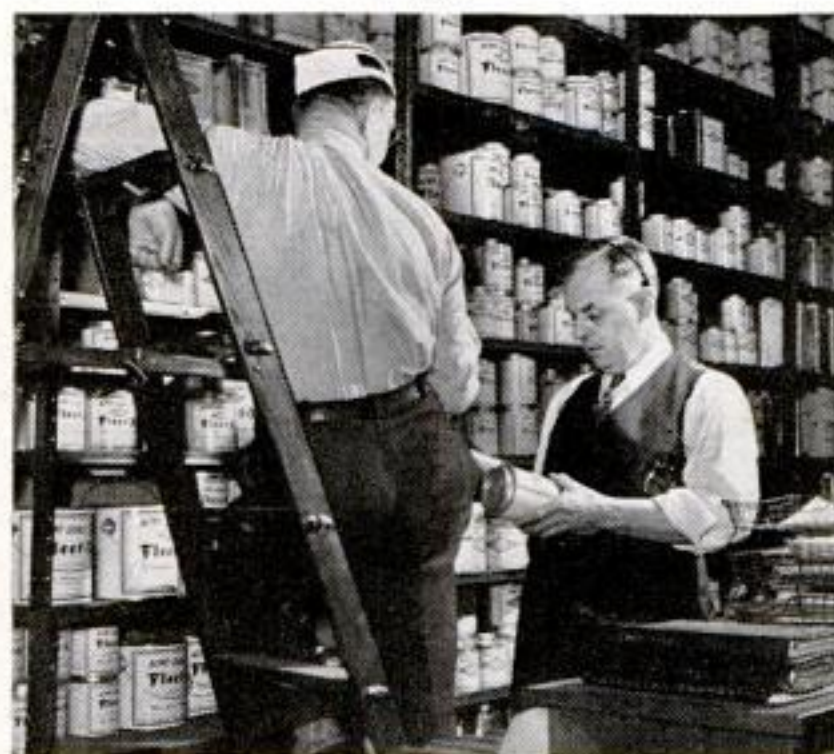

And thanks to the vision of Dean Babbitt, Sonotone's far-seeing leader, in building a nation-wide organization of Sonotone Consultants, this scientific help can be brought to your home or your place of business simply by telephoning your nearest Sonotone Consultant.

"Then and there, the Sonotone Consultant, Mr. D. L. Agnew, made my husband's Audiogram . . . explained how the audicle worked . . . and fitted him with a Sonotone individualized to his needs."

"And what a difference his Sonotone made! No matter how busy he is at the office, no matter how many salesmen he has to see during the day, he comes home fresh and happy."

"Henry's a new man since he got that Sonotone," continued Mrs. Wilhelmi. "He's himself again. He's enjoying life. When we go out, he's the life of the party, and not off by himself in a corner. He told me once that he wouldn't take $25,000 for his Sonotone if he couldn't get another one. And I wouldn't either!"

Sonotone Consultants (left) listen intently as an engineer explains a technical process. Each month at Elmsford, a selected group of Consultants is given intensive "post-graduate" schooling on better fitting techniques, new research trends, and the handling of the psychological problems so often met with in hearing losses.

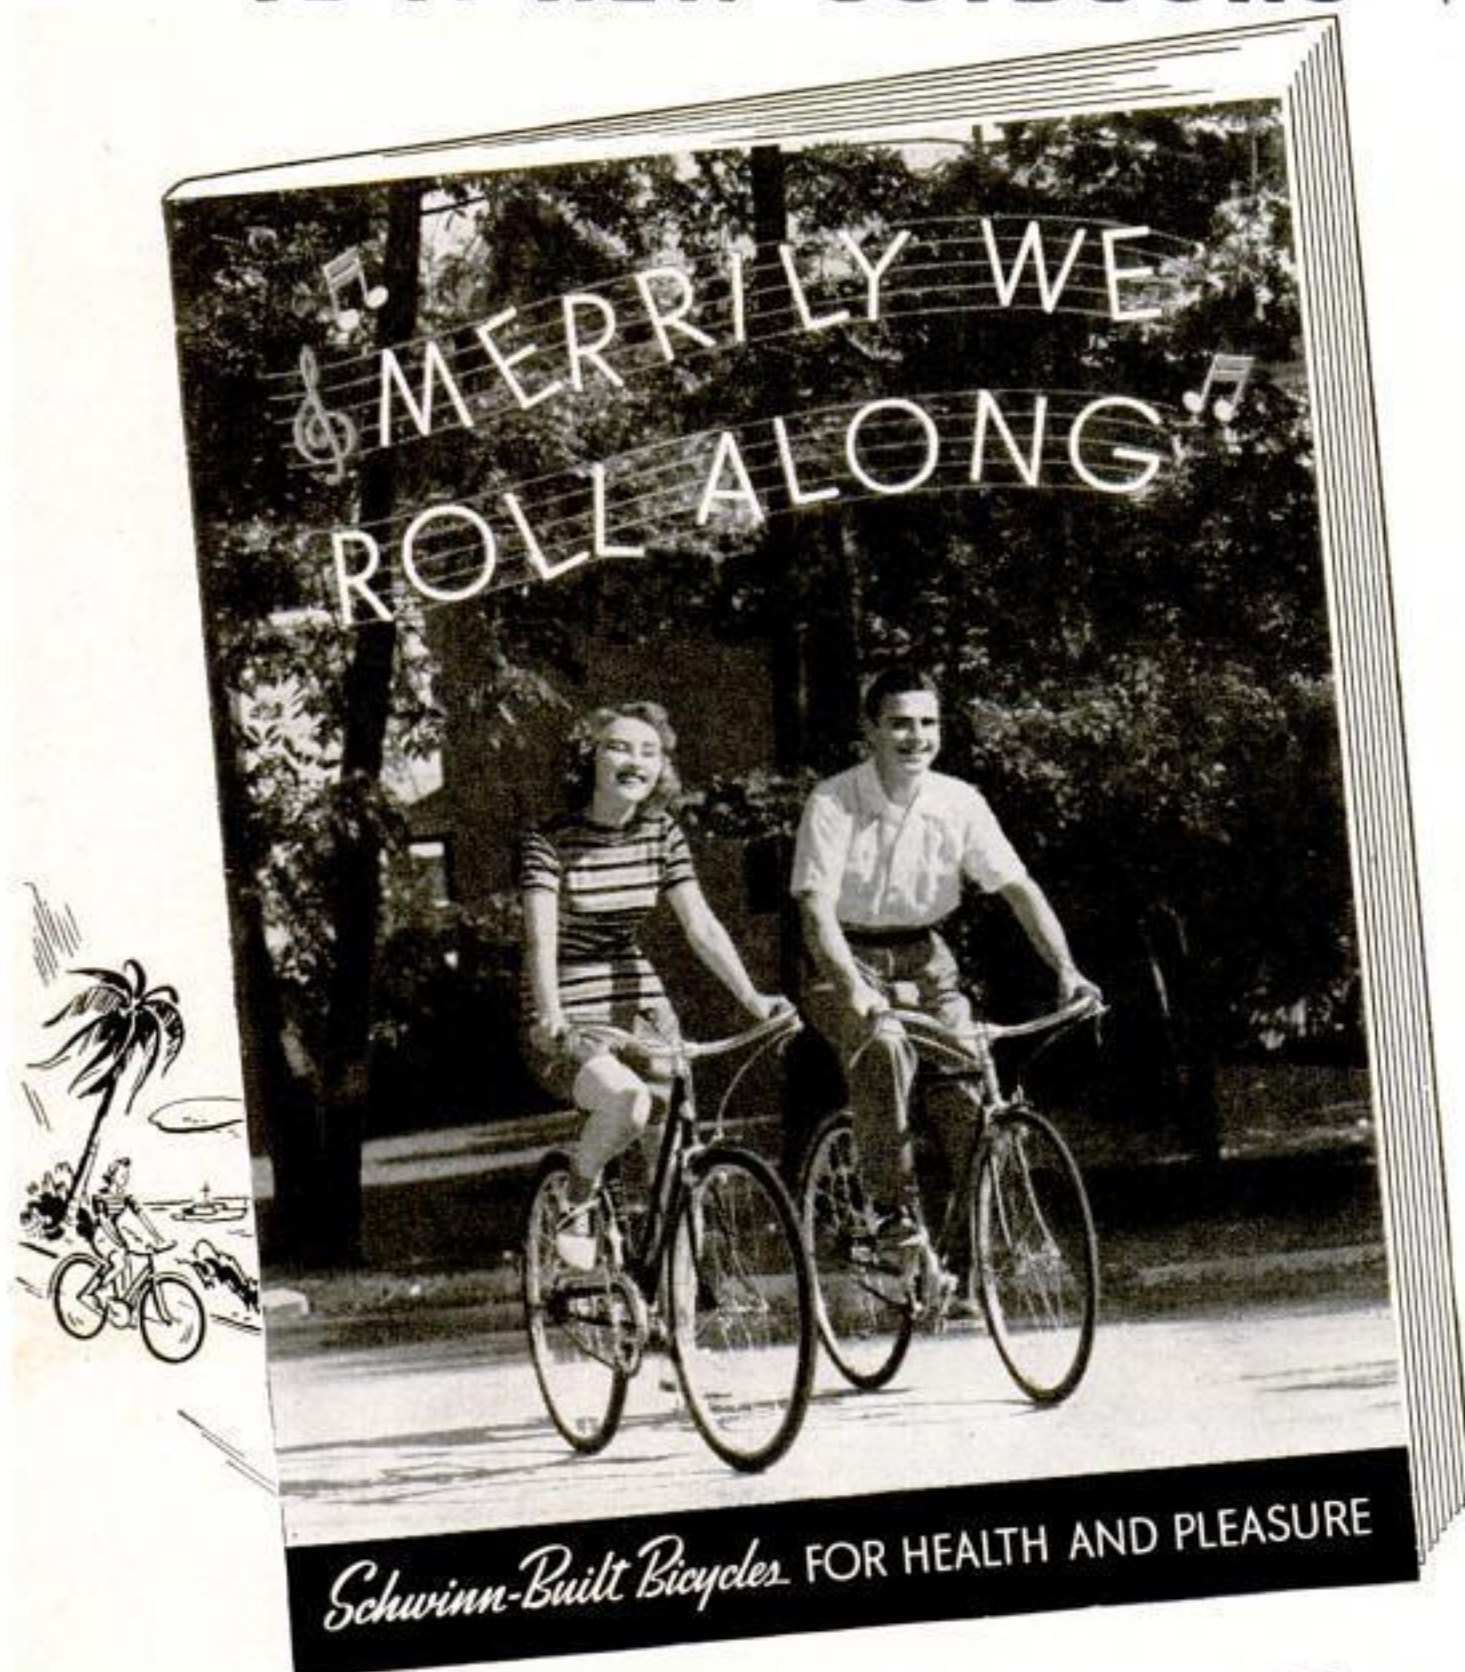

For full information on Sonotone, look in your telephone book for SONOTONE (there are offices in over 125 cities) or write Sonotone, Elmsford, N. Y. In Canada, address 225 Yonge St., Toronto. And in England, write 144 Wigmore St., London, W. I.

supply that was ravaged by disease and untrained for mechanical work. They had to transport almost all their material and heavy machinery 1,800 miles, adopt safeguards against a deplorable health and sanitation situation, haggle with local government functionaries on points of clearance and wait—and wait—on Washington. As an Army engineer described it: "On a project in the States we have a normal quota of problems which we are prepared to lick, but here we have all those plus a treacherous terrain, the world's worst labor market, an ocean between us and our supplies, politics in Washington and foreign complications in Trinidad. But I guess we'll make it."

Remarkable progress has already been made. At Fort Read, the Army base which has been expanded to 22 square miles since the lease was signed nine months ago, more than 15,000 native laborers are slashing their way through the bush with machetes, cutting, stacking, burning and stumping the rank vegetation; draining and filling swamps; laying sewer, water and electric lines; erecting barracks, mess halls, administration buildings and auxiliary and storage structures; building roads, bridges, culverts, air fields, gun emplacements and even a spur railroad to connect with the Trinidad government railways. Working alongside them are upward of a thousand brawny, tough-bitten Americans who direct the job, do the skilled work and man the heavy machines which slice off the tops of ridges, fill in the ravines, carve out the roads, change the courses of streams and literally alter the face of the earth. Occasionally they drop their labors to battle a bushmaster or a boa constrictor and they must always be on guard against malarial mosquitoes and vampire bats carrying paralytic rabies and the possibility of certain death.

For their heroic labors, the American workmen are paid 15

What can a man believe in?

LOOK INTO THIS BOY'S EYES. There you will see something that ought to make you feel a good deal better about the uncertainties of these times.

He feels distressed, no doubt about that. But you can also see courage there, and what is more important—faith. He trusts this man, his doctor.

That doctor is just an ordinary flesh-and-blood human being, like the rest of us. And yet, because of his work, he's someone apart.

He is a member of a profession dedicated to serving humanity. One who has sworn to the Hippocratic Oath which has been the physician's creed for nearly 2400 years—dating back to the time of Hippocrates, "The Father of Medicine."

It says in part: "Whatsoever house I enter, there will I go for the benefit of the sick, refraining from all wrongdoing or corruption . . . Whatsoever things I see or hear concerning the life of men, in my attendance on the sick or even apart therefrom, which ought not to be noised abroad, I will keep silence thereon, counting such things to be as sacred secrets."

As long as this old world contains a profession based upon such a creed, as long as there are men who put service to mankind ahead of considerations of money or personal comfort, much will be left to believe in.

*One cried,
one smiled,

IT WAS JUST a symphony over the radio.

But, this time, it seemed different . . .

To Aunt Jane it was the story of a boy who had gone to France, and never come home.

To Betty it was her first dance . . . high heels that hurt . . . and a partner half her size.

To Tom it was a song of courage . . . of the wonderful things he was going to do.

WHAT MADE the symphony different this time? It was the radio that brought it to them.

For now, Stromberg-Carlson gives you music with a purity that has never been heard outside the concert hall. It reproduces the high notes, low notes and overtones that radios have always "lost."

Today, for the first time, you can enjoy all the greatness of great music . . . if you listen through a Stromberg-Carlson.

THE IGOR STRAVINSKY "AUTOGRAPH MODEL"* . . . $390.
A combination FM-AM radio-phonograph. Hepplewhite cabinet. Also a range of models in authentic period designs.

HOW TO GET THE MOST OUT OF FM . . . Today you want the finest radio for standard programs, short wave, and records. But you also want the one best suited for Frequency Modulation under the Armstrong system, with its virtual freedom from static. This means . . . the widest range of natural tone, the Acoustical Labyrinth that ends "radio-set boom," the "full-floating," tone-true Speaker that prevents tone distortion at any usable volume, and the other exclusive advantages that make a Stromberg-Carlson the most advanced radio for all types of programs. Hear the Igor Stravinsky "Autograph Model," (left), a radio-phonograph combination, and you will know why music lovers say, "There is nothing finer than a Stromberg-Carlson!"

thing hot in quick succession. If "Madam" asks for something "Susie" will promise it to her "just now," a Trinidadian equivalent of mañana which may mean anytime from ten minutes to a week.

Considering the behavior of some Americans abroad and the snobbery of some British colonials, this A.E.F. and its hosts have hit it off exceedingly well. Except for a few of the snootiest families, the homes overlooking the beautiful Queen's Park Savanna have been opened wide to the visitors. Americans of all ranks have been invited into the Trinidad Country Club and other social organizations in such large numbers that the membership lists recently had to be closed. The only exceptions to this happy condition, perhaps, are the lower-paid construction worker and the much lower-paid enlisted man.

That isn't to say there have not been some unfortunate incidents. Not long ago, an elderly British official was slashed in the face with a bayonet in a scuffle with an American sentry. A crowd of American soldiers of Southern antecedents threatened to lynch a Negro chauffeur for running down one of their number. Scarcely a night goes by that American or British or Canadian soldiers or sailors do not stage a brawl in one of the downtown dives. But these are really "family" squabbles, stirred up by trying to mix high spirits with liquid spirits.

The Americans complain that the Trinidadians have jacked up rents to two and three times their normal level and their complaints seem to be justified. They also charge that a two-price system has been introduced in some stores—one for

Uncle Sam's Bread Basket Filled to the Brim

LAST summer the railroads were faced with what might easily have been called an impossible task. With a near-record wheat crop ripening in the field, the elevators were still jammed with the biggest carry-over in history. And, as everybody knew, the railroads had their hands full already with a mountainous pile of defense assignments.

But the railroads refused to call it impossible. They laid their plans to do the job.

Before the first wheat was cut, the railroads had started moving old wheat out of grain-belt elevators. Altogether more than 75,000,000 bushels were shifted to more distant points. And while the loaded cars were rolling out, a reserve army of 30,000 cars was being mobilized in the wheat belt, ready to handle the new harvest.

Result? The railroads were able to move every bushel for which storage space could be found! They could have moved more if there had been any place to take it, but with elevators filled to the brim, the wheat still remaining on the farms can be moved only as fast as consumption and export make space available.

This is just one example in many of how the American railroads work together to do a job—in cooperation with shippers, agricultural representatives and government agencies. And it's also a good example of how they get the job done!

► FOR REMOVING the haggard look and the tired feeling that's so evident on washday—there's nothing better than a new Maytag! It saves work. It saves time. Plenty of both. Here's how—that big square tub holds lots of clothes... the gyrofoam water action washes quickly, thoroughly and with fabric-saving gentleness... the sediment trap keeps water clean so that fewer changes are called for... the Roller Water Remover damp-dries all fabrics in a jiffy and without adjustments. The entire washday's over, from hamper to line, in an hour, and you're still as fresh as a daisy. Visit your Maytag dealer—see for yourself.

the native and one for the stranger—but so much price haggling goes on normally that it is difficult to substantiate this. The Trinidadians retort that the Yankees have enticed away their $6-to-$10-a-month-with-keep servants to work on the bases at double and triple the wages and there isn't much doubt about it.

One problem that has not been solved is morale. The great complaint of the enlisted man is: "What can I do with my leisure time?" After he has made the rounds of the three movie houses, attended an infrequent dance at the Prince's Building, watched a few boxing bouts and softball games, swum at Stauble's Beach and taken an expedition or two into the BLUEPRINTING THE NEW BASE countryside, he has exhausted the recreational facilities available at $21 a month and upward. From there on he is exposed to the temptations of resorts which can hold their own with the bawdiest of Marseille or Shanghai.

But there is also a brighter side. I spent a day with First Class Private James M. Jolly, 21, of the Marine Detachment, formerly of Whiteville, N. C. Private Jolly enlisted because he thought it was his patriotic duty, likes foreign service and believes it will be "mighty fine training for a career." He is now drawing $36 a month and putting $12 of it in the post bank. Back of this financial wizardry is the fact that he does not drink and his money goes only for cigarets, ice cream, movies and dancing. With his liquid brown eyes and glossy black hair, Private Jolly is more than holding his own in the field of light romance. Inasmuch as the Marines were on the ground first, he has staked

"JIM has decided that he is the one to select our new range—so he's looking 'em over in a very big way! And what discoveries the dear innocent is making about the economy and efficiency of Gas as a fuel... the cleanness of Gas—You'd think he was telling me something—Bless him!

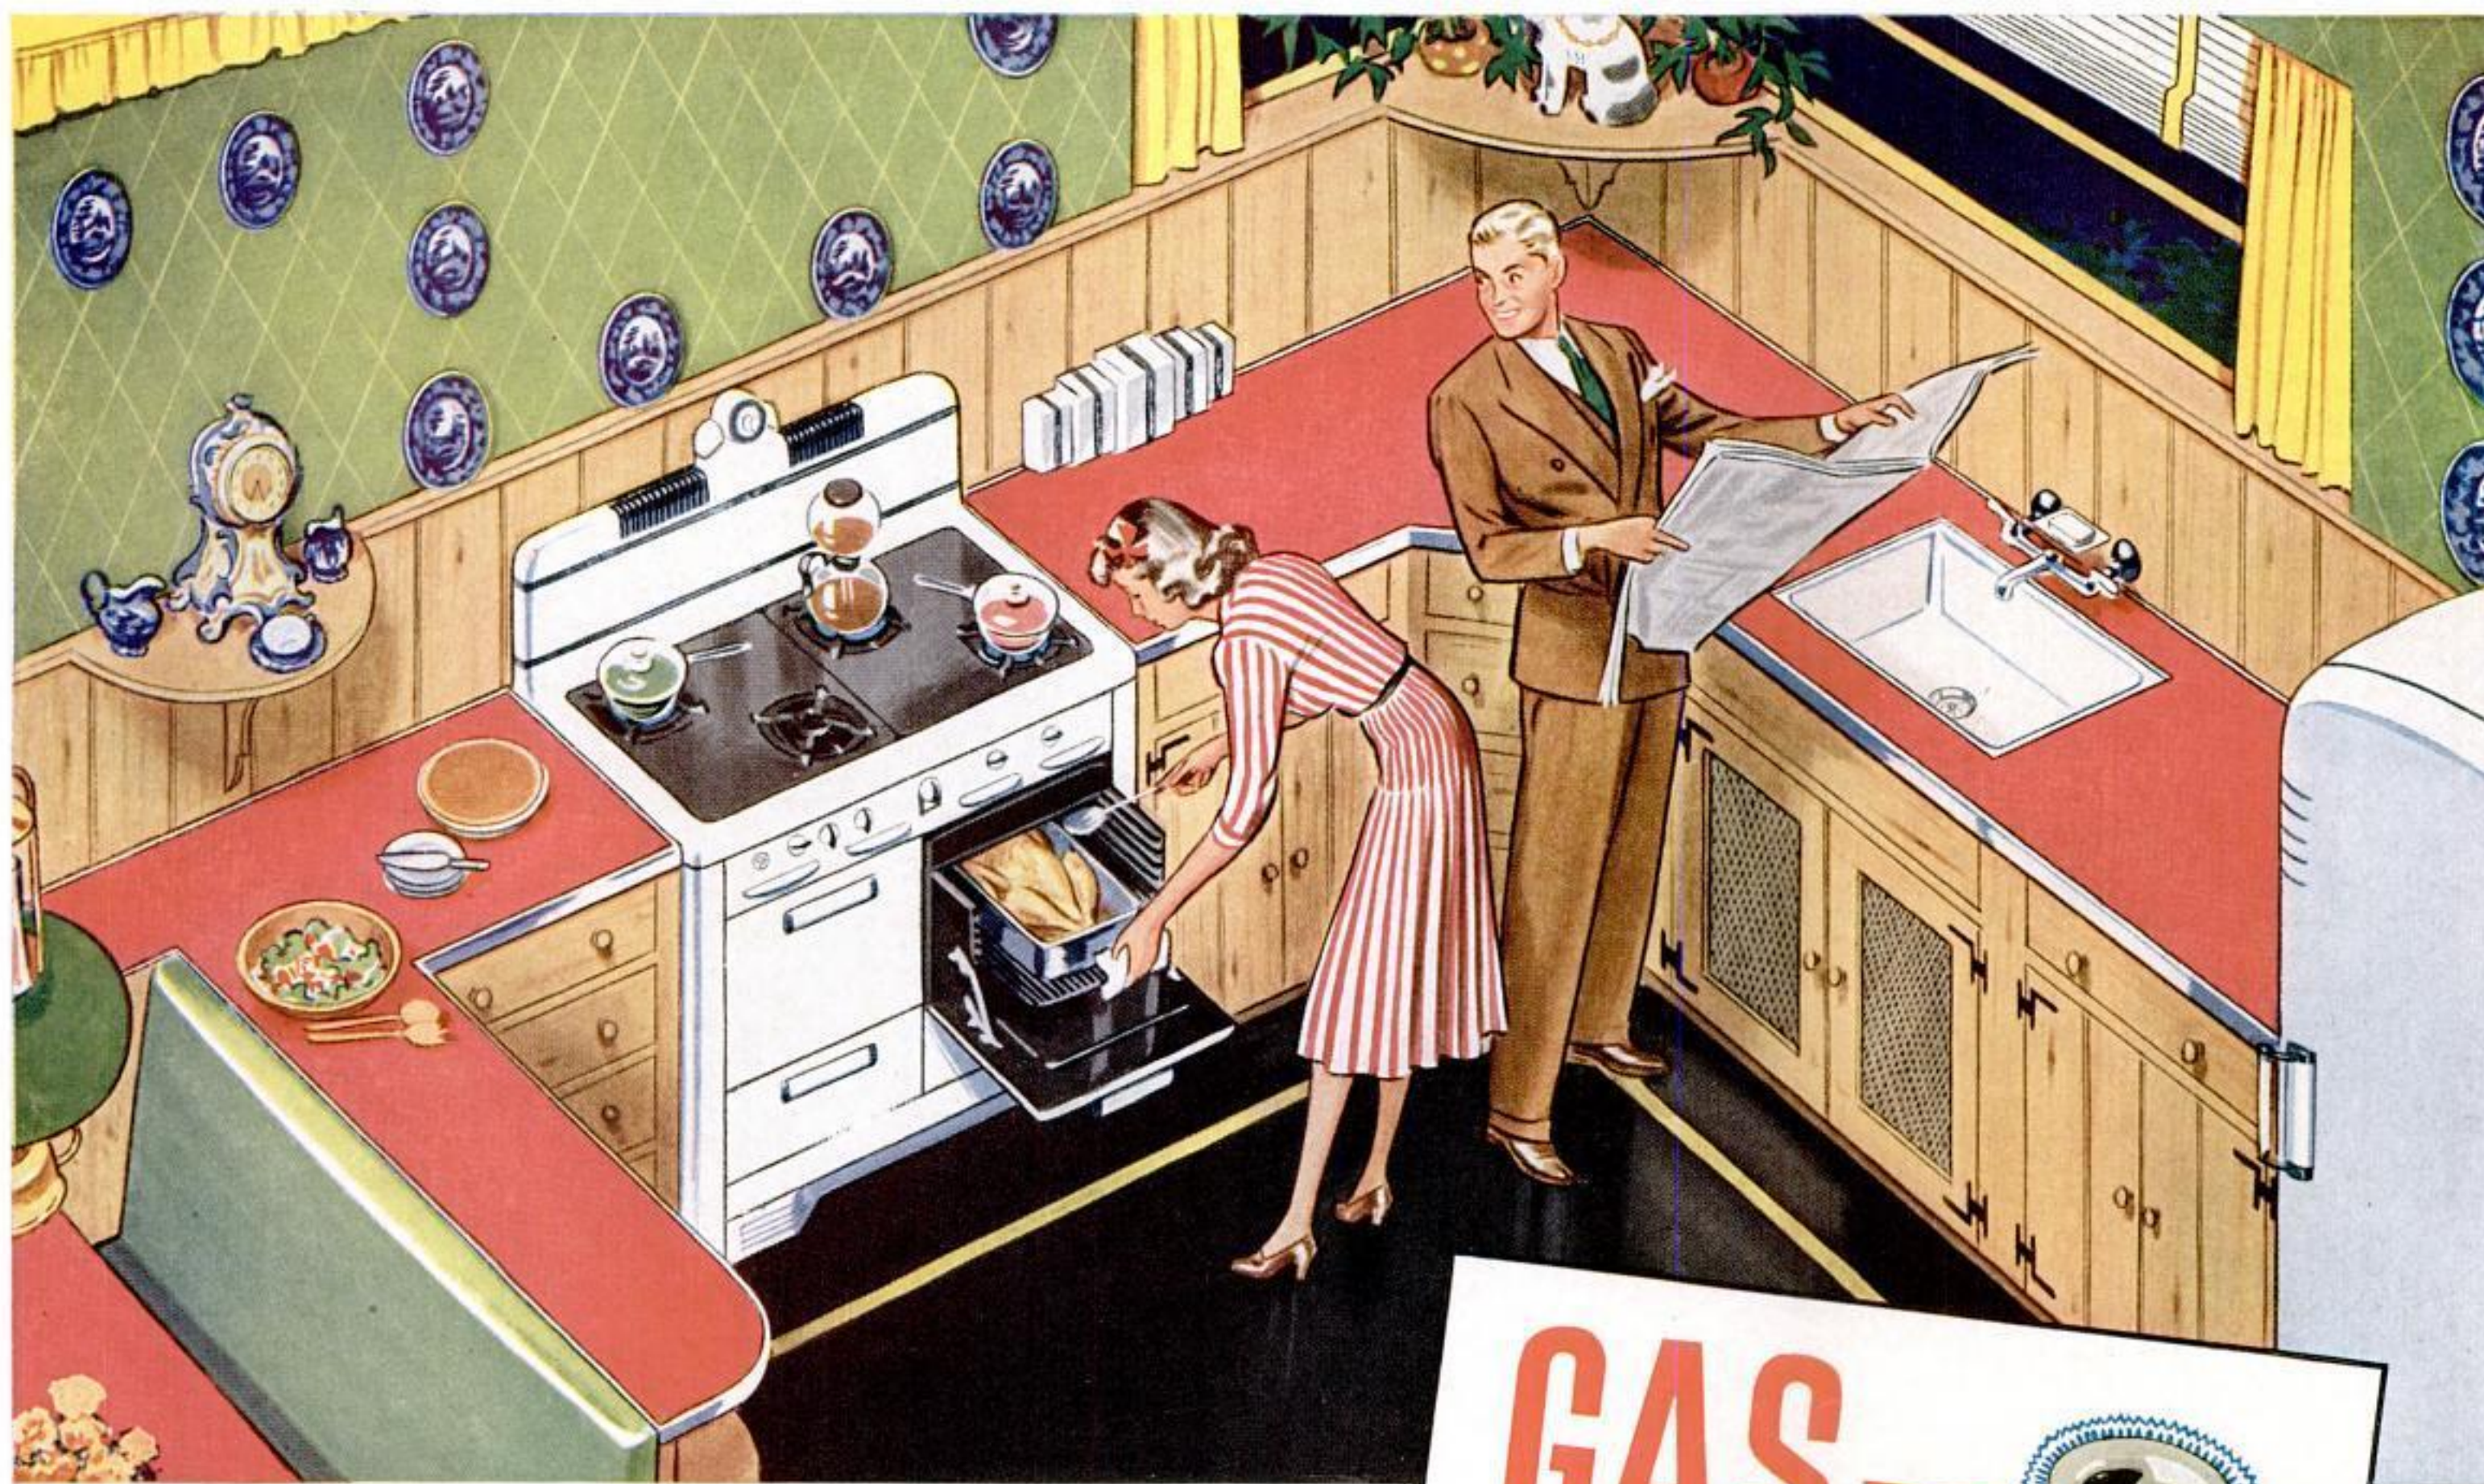

I could have told him at the start we'd get a Gas range—because I want the speed of Gas... the instant high heat of Gas that starts things cooking in a jiffy... the flexibility of Gas that gives me any degree of heat I want—Because an up-to-the-minute Gas range will save me no end of time and work. Because I've got the beauty I want all picked out—confidentially!"

"Confidentially—She..."

"JEAN needs a man's advice about important things—like this new range we're buying! Sure—I know modern Gas ranges have signal simmer burners... oven heat control... "smokeless," high-speed broilers... insulated ovens... automatic lighting... and dozens of stream-lined gadgets—Woman stuff!

What sold me is the fact that a Gas range will last for years... and won't need costly replacements—That Gas service is dependable—year in, year out—in any weather! Of course I have been thinking about the swell juicy steaks... the wonderful biscuits Jean could turn out on a new Gas range—confidentially!"

THIS SEAL certifies that the Gas range carrying it meets all the 22 super-performance standards established by the Gas industry. It stands for the "certified performance" of the range you buy—regardless of the make of the range. Today 24 of America's leading range manufacturers offer CP (certified performance) models. Look for the CP seal when you buy.

FEWER but FINER!

RCA Victor is cooperating to the full with national defense priority requirements. Because of these requirements, shortages exist in certain raw materials needed for radios and phonograph-radios and there will be a universal decrease in the number of instruments to be made. Hence, RCA Victor products for the home will be fewer. But they will be finer than ever. For, as a result of defense work of which, we, too, are doing our share, RCA Victor quality standards, always the highest, are now more exacting than ever.

out his rights in Trinidad homes and can generally count on feminine companionship. "Their folks generally go along," he says, "but the old man usually foots the bill and that's all right with me." Unfortunately, he and his experiences are not typical of the American service man in Trinidad. So acute has the morale problem become that Major David Ogden, who is in charge of constructing the Army base, recently created an American Engineer Recreational Association and named a five-man governing board to build an entertainment program.

Underlying every conversation about the bases is the unspoken fear or hope that Great Britain eventually will hand over the island or the U. S. will take it over. British officeholders and Trinidadian businessmen or planters, on the whole, are violently opposed to a change in sovereignty for selfish and patriotic reasons. A small class of professional and white-collar people secretly favor it because they feel that the British Colonial Office has ignored them in awarding jobs. A large class of "high brown" functionaries and clerks who can almost pass as white shudder at the thought of the American color line and would vote "no." But the overwhelming majority of black and brown masses frankly pray for the coming of the Stars and Stripes on the theory that "it couldn't be worse than this and it might be better." As far as they are concerned, Uncle Sam comes from fabulous Hollywood and he never goes out without his money bags. They, of course, never heard of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Lorene Squire's bird pictures on pages 87-94, which represent an ambitious climax to her years of bird photography, almost brought Miss Squire's career to an untimely end. One day she drove along a North Dakota road when the roadster went off the road edge and down a steep bank, turned over on Miss Squire who luckily crawled out with only a broken collarbone. She had the bone reset and in ten days she was chasing ducks again.

The following list, page by page, shows the source from which each picture in this issue was gathered. Where a single page is indebted to several sources credit is recorded picture by picture (left to right, top to bottom), and line by line (lines separated by dashes) unless otherwise specified.

JUST BEHIND RUSSIAN FRONT IN SEPTEMBER, FIVE-CAR CAVALCADE OF AMERICAN AND ENGLISH CORRESPONDENTS IS DUG OUT OF MUD. SOME ROADS WERE MUCH WORSE THAN THIS

RUSSIAN MUD AND BLOOD STALL GERMAN ARMY

In the week that Josef Stalin predicted Germany will collapse within a year and Goebbels admitted a possibility of defeat, LIFE Photographer Margaret Bourke-White brought back these pictures of a visit to the Russian front lines. Miss Bourke-White accompanied a band of U. S. and English correspondents to the front in the third week of September. In six days she saw exactly 16 minutes of sunlight. For the rest, it was mud, mud, mud and rain, rain, rain, the heaviest autumn rains in the memory of living Russians. The temperature was about the same as November weather in the northern U. S. The Russian M-2's used by the correspondents were dug out of the mud over and over by a special crew of Russian engineers who followed them in a truck (above).

The Nazi plan to exterminate Russia had been mired, not so much by mud, as by the fighting Red Army. On the following pages is shown the grim battlefield near Yelnya on which the Russians won a victory over the Germans in September. The Germans reconquered this land in early October, but last week a new Russian offensive was throwing the Germans back from Moscow.

In many places the Russians had stalled the Germans to the costly point of trench warfare. Far from destroying the Red Army, the German tactics had only pushed the Russians back at a great price in German men and matériel. The Russian soldiers Miss Bourke-White saw just behind the front were husky and well fed, with the red-blooded look of men who get enough meat. They wore good boots, cape raincoats, heavy mushroom-shaped helmets. They often needed a shave, but they had a high morale and discipline, saluting punctiliously and singing on the march. Above all, they knew how to fight the Germans.

On the 24th Anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, Stalin on Nov. 6 told the Supreme Council in Moscow that Russia would triumph. He claimed German casualties of 4,500,000 and huge Russian reserves moving toward the front. Russia's just war "must and does breed heroes" while Germany's unjust war "must and does breed professional plunderers, corrupt and devoid of moral backbone." He cried for more tanks, anti-tank guns, anti-tank planes, anti-tank grenades, anti-tank traps, to beat the German superiority in tanks. He thanked the U. S. for a $1,000,000,000 loan without interest and noted that the U. S. and Great Britain safeguard democratic liberties. He suggested a British invasion in the west, to draw off German troops. The German rear, in the conquered nations and inside Germany itself, is "a volcano" of hatred and doubt and exhaustion. "Well," cried Stalin, "if the Germans wish this to be a war of extermination, they will get it! . . . Modern war is a war of motors. The production of motors in the U. S., Great Britain and the Soviet Union combined . . . is one of the basic reasons for the inevitable doom of the predatory Hitler imperialism." Next day, keeping his annual appointment in Red Square despite the German Air Force 70 miles away, Stalin said: "Another few months, another half-year, one year maybe, Germany must burst under the weight of her crimes." If she does burst, the mud and blood that broke her was that shown on these pages.

WAR PASSED HERE

THE BATTLEFIELD OF YELNYA

This is the field of Yelnya, where for five weeks, July 29–Sept. 5, the armies of Germany and Russia met in clashing, grinding combat. It was utterly deserted when Miss Bourke-White reached it ten days later. The smell of death had been washed away by rains and the last dead had been buried. Every bush and tree had been torn up, broken to bits and ground into the earth. The land itself was tank-torn and shell gutted. All over the ten miles of the battlefield Miss Bourke-White did not see a bird that flew or a worm that crawled.

Here, where hundreds of thousands of men had died, there was none of war's glory. For this was the slugging, earthbound combat of the first World War—but on a bloodier, huger scale. Mixed into the soil Miss Bourke-White walked upon were the mangled remnants of living: torn bits of raincoats, pieces of boots, pages of German magazines. Never was there anything in one piece. In the zigzag trenches she saw a great number of inexplicable dead mice and once an ornamented silver samovar pierced by one bullet hole.

Yelnya was the sector on the central front where the Russians pushed forward in September. The aim was to drive the Germans back from a position they had held for five weeks, and in which they were strongly entrenched. For a month the Russians dug zigzag trenches, inching nearer German machine-gun posts. Tanks rolled out on this flat plain of maneuver. German planes tried in vain to bomb out the Russian position. Russian artillery outgunned the German artillery and "dominated the field." And a million men dug in and cowered in the earth. At length the Russians rose from their trenches, their deep dugouts and shallow advanced basins scooped in the level earth, and delivered the formidable Russian bayonet charge.

At colossal cost in human blood, the Russians threw the Germans back. Later on the Russians lost this field again, but the fight at Yelnya was not in vain, for they had taken an awesome toll of German manpower. At this point the Germans lost their 28th, 106th, 161st Infantry, 14th Motorized and 7th Divisions.

Trench warfare is marked by dugouts near Yelnya. Germans dug in by this stream to face Russians coming from upper right. A tank had been half-buried as a pillbox, later removed. This position was held for over a month before the Russians recaptured it.

German dugouts in clay, a little upstream from picture at top, were braced with timber and sandbagged. All dead had been buried. There was only smell of rain-soaked earth. Litter included gashed helmets, ammunition, clothing, tin cans, newspapers.

TRIP TO THE FRONT

CORRESPONDENTS GET PLENTY OF MUD AND VODKA

by MARGARET BOURKE-WHITE

After tramping through the mud at the front all day (see pictures on preceding pages), we were entertained almost to the bursting point every night. The Russians love to give banquets for their guests and the par for such meals is three and a half hours. In various "headquarters" in school-houses and warehouses, we sat down to caviar with onion and always raw fish, raw and salted cucumbers, and sometimes slices of cheese and ham along with bologna and salami and pieces of black bread with lots of butter. But this smörgåsbord was only an appetizer and was followed by cabbage soup, boiled potatoes, hot beef or chicken, stewed fruit, apples and little cookies, and chocolates that the Russians call "Russian bears." These evening banquets were followed the next day with a breakfast of raw fish and a small glass of breakfast vodka.

At the fanciest banquets at the front we had white vodka and brown Hunters vodka, Russian wines, and then port or brandy and more vodka. It is etiquette in Russia to accompany drinks with toasts. Most of the toasts were in three parts: to the friendship of America, Britain and Russia; to the Red Army; and to its great leader, "Tovarich Stalin." When Stalin is mentioned in a toast, everyone rises and drains his glass. As "Uncle Joe" got involved in almost every toast, it was no wonder that one correspondent slipped away quietly beneath the banquet table one night and did not recover until the next afternoon. In the meanwhile he had been taken almost within a vodka-breath of the German lines and had to write his story from the notes the other correspondents lent him.

Bred and trained by generations to have a disregard for death, the Russian makes a fine fighter. A favorite verse to the favorite song of the troops went: "The Germans think they will take their breakfast in Leningrad, their lunch in Sevastopol and their supper in Moscow—but we will feed the Fascist head-hunters iron to eat." The Russians hate the Germans in such a politically conscious way that they only occasionally refer to the invaders as Germans, but instead usually call them "Mad Fascists," "Head-hunting Fascists" and "Mad Dog Fascists."

The Russian soldiers, who take great pride in their food and equipment, were always talking about the shoddiness of the German uniforms, the tin in the Iron Crosses they picked up, the thinness of the German helmets, and they claimed that all captured Nazi aviators were found to be wearing no underwear. When we interviewed the captured airmen who had bombed Vyazma, I wanted to ask one of the Germans whether his fatherland thought enough of him to provide him with a suit of underwear, but as I was the only woman present, I felt that one of the men should ask the question. Unfortunately none asked.

I did, however, have a chance to verify what the Russians had said about the German helmets. Near one of the battlefields we found a "scorched earth" village, where the straw-thatched roofs of the cottages had collapsed and German helmets, split by shrapnel and pierced by bullets, were lying around by the hundreds. In five minutes you could pick up 50 of them. I took one from the top of a post. It was as thin as one side of a cigaret case. There was a clean bullet hole above the left ear and inside the helmet the German soldier had painted his name: "Herbst."

Across the road from this mutilated village there was a hill pock-marked by little caves which ran up the hill in tiers and made it look like the site of a deserted Indian village in Arizona. Here the Germans had been forced to dig in and, as the hill overlooked and commanded a flat plain, the Russians must have recaptured it at terrific cost. Piled around the ground and in the "caves" were stocks of German ammunition. There were also hundreds of anti-tank mines, most of them in light straw containers that resembled woven wastebaskets. The Germans had apparently been driven from the hill so suddenly that they had been forced to leave their baskets of ammunition behind.

Debris had been left behind on other battlefields. On one, unexploded shells showed through the mud and the prongs of mines bristled around us. Suddenly at one spot my foot struck something soft. I gasped and a cloud of green dust shot up in front of my face. I had stepped on a molded loaf of bread that had puffed apart when my foot hit it.

During our trip we were interested in observing how well the political commissars attached to the Army get along with the military commandants. We saw no evidence of friction. At our almost nightly banquets, the commissar usually sat next to the commandant and if they observed any less friendly protocol, it was not visible to us. At one banquet a timid Russian soldier who had seen me picking red poppies came in and handed me a great armful with a flowery speech that ended up with an announcement that the flowers had been picked and presented on behalf of "the entire Red Army."

Three miles from German lines correspondents banquet in a tent on chicken, beef, black bread, cucumbers, raw fish, Hunters vodka, white vodka, champagne, port. Later they danced to phonograph. Below: Russian dead in battle of Yelnya are buried under new-planted firs and memorial plaque. Germans are buried in their own trenches (foreground) without marking.

GERMAN AIRMEN WHO DROPPED DEATH ON RUSSIAN FAMILY ARE SHOT DOWN

Of the millions of newly dead on the long Russian front, death went out of its way to find one little family in Vyazma. A German officer in Smolensk was irritated by a Russian air raid on the Shekalovo Airdrome at Smolensk, sent a single bomber, apparently to blast the Vyazma hotel where Lieutenant General Sokolovsky, chief of staff of the Central Front, often stays. The plane dropped three bombs at 7:10 a. m. Sept. 16, killing 15. The one that landed across the street from the hotel killed four of a family of six. As Miss Bourke-White ran up, a shivering little dog ran out of the white cloud of dust. Somebody carried out of the house next door a stretcher with the dust-covered body of an old man, who suddenly sat up. But the people at top of the opposite page did not sit up.

Amazingly, the very plane that had bombed Vyazma was shot down a few miles north and three of the Germans who had brought Hitler's death to the Vyazma family were questioned by American correspondents. They were unremarkable enough: Radio Operator Josef Trocha, 26, son of a tailor, a Nazi Party member who answered cockily; Bomber Walther Rasek, 24, son of a janitor, who was in pain from a head wound; and Pilot Rudolf Tause, 25, son of a butcher, whose arm was sprained. Cross-questioning was polite and impersonal, in contrast to the passionate hatred Russian civilians feel toward German prisoners. The prisoners said that "America is in the war already" but "America is far away." They considered their German planes better than either British or Russian, knew there were British planes fighting in Russia. The Nazi radio operator was bitter and sarcastic, the pilot pleasant and even humorous, the bomber dazed by his wound. The correspondents, who included men for the United Press, Associated Press, New York Times, Chicago Daily News, London News Chronicle, asked questions directly in German.

Prisoners are questioned by American correspondents in schoolhouse near front. Told they had killed women and children in Vyazma, Germans replied they were trying to bomb nearby airport, apparently in revenge for a previous Russian bombing of Smolensk airport. Atmosphere is tense but not vengeful. Wounded man got sympathy. These men had bombed London.

Ten minutes after three German bombs had dropped just outside the Russian staff hotel in the town of Vyazma, Miss Bourke-White took this picture of a dead girl and her grandmother.

er. Killed also were the girl's father and younger brother, caught by shell splinters and the killing concussion of the blast as they ran toward the door of their wood-and-plaster house.

The mother of the family hit by the bomb and her surviving son had been up the street when the bomb landed. Now they weep on the bench outside the house, deaf to the comforting of the uniformed Medical Sisters. A few minutes later, a second air raid was signaled and they were hustled off to Vyazma's air-raid shelter. The raid seemed to be aimed at staff hotel.

LIFE ON THE NEWSFRONTS OF THE WORLD

Goebbels warns Germany of "inferno" of defeat as Japan sends ace diplomat to U. S. to end stalemate

A great many people standing on a great many corners thought last week that after two and a quarter years World War II was gradually approaching a turning point. For the first time a top-notch Nazi, Propaganda Minister Dr. Joseph Goebbels, writing for the magazine Das Reich, publicly admitted the possibility of a German defeat. The Germans, wrote Goebbels, must resign themselves to a "hard and relentless" war. "The Axis powers are really fighting for bare existence, and the worries and distress which we all must bear in the war would pale in the face of the inferno which would await us if we were to lose."

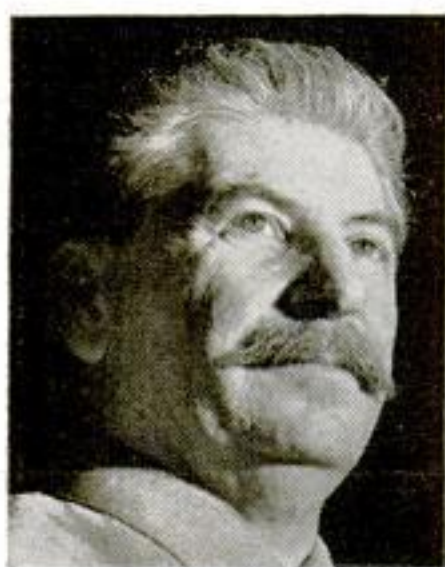

GOEBBELS

While Goebbels ate humble pie, Stalin, De Gaulle and Churchill joined in a subdued but optimistic chant. From battle-bruised Moscow, with Red fighter planes patrolling overhead, the Bolshevik dictator wagered that Hitler would go under within six months to a year. In London the Free French leader, whose prophecies have been among the soundest of the war, now prophesied that the moment had arrived "when the tide of victory is on the verge of turning" in the Allies' favor.

Finally it was Winston Churchill's turn to flash the greenest light that he has so far dared. In the bomb-battered city of Hull he said: "We came through the dark and perilous passage and now once again are masters of our own destiny."

The facts that underlay these speeches, Allied and Nazi alike, was a growing realization that the war was slowly but almost inevitably approaching a stalemate. In Russia the Germans had carved out huge territorial gains but were losing the race against time. They were in for their first winter campaign. In the air neither the Luftwaffe nor R. A. F. had won decisive superiority. At sea the navies and shipyards of Britain and the U. S. were more nearly holding their own. In the Pacific, Japan and the U. S. were tied up for the moment in a diplomatic pretzel (see below).

STALIN

The Germans still had the advantage of operating on interior lines of communication, but these lines, which once led only to Poland and France, now led thousands of miles away to Libya, Murmansk, Leningrad, Moscow, Rostov and Sevastopol. The Germans were no longer able to concentrate overwhelming force near the frontiers, but were being forced to diffuse it hundreds of miles away. Thus the defensive power of the individually weaker Allies was slowly moving toward equality with the diffused offensive power of Germany.

Kurusu at the Bat. Like a pinch-hitter rushed in to break up a tie ball game, Japan's pinch-hitting diplomat, Saburo Kurusu, was last week flying across the Pacific in an effort to break the 75-day stalemate in American-Japanese relations.

His trip was arranged so hastily that U. S. Ambassador Joseph C. Grew in Tokyo had to ask the China Clipper to wait over two days in Hong Kong so that Kurusu could catch it. In Tokyo, Kurusu's American born wife was confined to her bed, "exhausted from two days and nights in assisting her husband to pack."

The home run Kurusu was sent in to make was a compromise settlement that would determine the spheres of power and influence in China, the Pacific and Asia between the U. S. and Japan. Washington observers, however, felt that the odds were 10-to-1 against Kurusu's connecting with the kind of slow ball that Cordell Hull was ready to pitch. If Kurusu offered a settlement favorable to Japan, the U. S. would not accept. If Hull offered a settlement favorable to the U. S., Japan was not likely to accept.

KURUSU

Wheeler's Redcoats. Beaten on the Neutrality Act, Senate isolationists sat back and took loud comfort in proclaiming that "our hands won't be stained with American blood." The best their leader, Senator Wheeler, could do was to get up in the Senate and fish from his pocket a dozen lead soldiers bought in a Washington toy store. "Here are British Redcoats made of lead," he proclaimed, "sent over here when we in the U. S. are told that use of lead must be curtailed because of defense. Why are these little toy soldiers here?" With sadly misplaced sarcasm, he went on: "Why are they not being made into bullets to kill the horrible Nazi soldiers, the soldiers of this monster?" Nobody in the Senate applauded Wheeler when he sat down. Any toy lover could have told him that even metal-hungry Germany sent lead and iron military toys over until the blockade stopped shipments.

Halifax Egged. The people of Detroit like to throw things at non-Detroiters. Last fall, they threw a cantaloupe at Wendell Willkie. Then a few years ago, they threw fruit at "Ducky" Medwick. Last week, some isolationist Detroit females threw eggs and tomatoes at the visiting British Ambassador, Lord Halifax. One egg hit Halifax. Looking down at a spattered tomato, the lanky British peer expressed envy that people have eggs and tomatoes to throw about. "In England," he said mildly, "they are very scarce." His Lordship took a thoroughly undiplomatic interest in the New York City election. Told that LaGuardia had been re-elected mayor, he beamed and said: "That's jolly fine."

Hibernation in France. When people have too little to eat they try to conserve their dwindling energy by exercising less and sleeping more. Last week the Vichy French, suffering from malnutrition if not semistarvation, were moving toward a state of hibernation. To ease the strain on athletes, the length of soccer games was reduced from 90 minutes to 80, rugby from 80 to 70. Basketball games will only take 36 minutes and tennis matches will be limited to three sets. The length of boxing bouts and the distance of bicycle races may also be reduced.

Previously the Vichy French had postponed the opening of schools from 8 a. m. to 8:30 a. m. to give students more sleep. Correspondents reported that hungry adults were sleeping two hours longer at night.

Soviet Blowout. Just about the only official Americans who went to the annual Soviet Embassy birthday party two years ago were a couple of Congressmen and Mrs. John L. Lewis. There were also lots of Italians and Germans. But this year it's different. To the Soviet party in Washington last week went Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Henry Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Welles, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Jones, Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson, Attorney General Francis Biddle, also scads of ambassadors, a few U. S. generals. But no Italians or Germans. Almost 3,000 guests jammed traffic for three blocks getting into the elegant embassy. Once inside they plunged into the caviar, sturgeon, vodka, champagne as if there were never again going to be any more caviar, sturgeon, vodka or champagne. It was like old times.

As if to make it more so, the news came from Moscow that the new Soviet Ambassador to the U. S. would be chubby Maxim Litvinoff, once Soviet foreign affairs chief, who came over to the U. S. in the goodwill days of 1933 and persuaded Franklin Roosevelt to grant U. S. recognition of Soviet Russia.

LITVINOFF

PICTURE OF THE WEEK

If he had looked overhead as he walked out of the Mediation Board hearing on his demand for a union shop in captive coal mines, John L. Lewis probably would have snorted. The bulky, non-interventionist labor leader has not yet been convinced that time is short, that Hitler has given the U. S. any real reason for rushing things. He was still standing on his threat: either the mine union gets a union shop or the miners strike. As the country waited for the Board's decision, it was given something else to worry about. The railroad brotherhoods, having asked for a 30% pay raise and been given only a temporary 7½% raise, called a strike for Dec. 5—an unthinkable strike which would stop every railroad train dead on the tracks.

Expressing his feelings about Mr. Lewis and other Americans, President Roosevelt blasted those "industrialists and labor leaders who place personal advantage over the welfare of the nation." He said this in a speech to the members of the International Labor Organization, the most effective remnant of the earnest organizations which sprang up around the League of Nations. From all over the world, labor delegates came to the U. S. to make clear their overwhelming pre-occupation with the defeat of Hitler. Out of their I. L. O. discussions and their fusty speeches came one warming evidence of sensible internationalism. As a hint of things to come, the delegates from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Greece, with the full consent of their official governments-in-exile, pledged themselves to work in a post-Hitler Europe for a customs union which would bring about a long-needed economic unity in Central Europe.

A FLOTILLA OF MERCHANT SHIPS HEADS EASTWARD ACROSS PERILOUS WATERS UNDER THE GUARDIAN EYES OF THE U. S. NAVY'S FAR-RANGING NORTH ATLANTIC AIR PATROL

U. S. GETS LOOK AT NAVY AIR PATROL

On Nov. 7 the Senate voted to arm U. S. merchant ships and to let them enter belligerent ports. The U. S. Navy had already begun to delouse the Atlantic of Nazi submarines. Now the U. S. public wanted its goods to reach Britain in U. S. bottoms. As a preview of what the winter seascape might be, the Navy last week released first pictures of its Atlantic Air Patrol.

In the convoy, viewed here from an American PBV, few if any of the ships are American-owned. But in weeks to come vast flotillas of U. S. vessels will similarly traverse the chilly sea. On Nov. 4 President Roosevelt asked Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $349,000,000 for Navy aviation. On Nov. 5 it was announced 50 new escort vessels would be laid down.

Meanwhile the Navy counted its first fatalities of the Battle of the Atlantic. Of 112 men lost with the Kearny and Reuben James, one was Wallace Lee Sowers who took the pictures on the opposite page. They show the James's next-to-last trip. They reached his family Oct. 15, just 15 days before his ship went down.

A DEAD SAILOR'S ALBUM OF THE ATLANTIC PATROL

These snapshots of patrol duty were taken by W. L. Sowers, lost on the Reuben James. His last letter to his family follows:

"We are just returning from trip to Iceland; really had the experience. . . . On the way up we were attacked by a Submarine. Throwing depth charges left and right, presumably we sunk it, as oil and wreckage were floating all around us. While there we did a lot of patrolling for Subs around the vicinity where British merchant ships were sunk. We did not rescue any survivors.

This old can is making History. We convoyed the first American Troops to Greenland and Now we are the first to convoy the Limeys across the ocean. We picked a limey convoy 350 miles off the coast of Scotland which consisted of 46 merchant ships. The best time they could make was 8 knots. It took us 20 days to make the trip. On the way across our radio picked up message of a German Sub. giving our position; but nothing happened. We are going into Boston Navy yard for four days, then we are returning to Iceland. Hope to be home for Xmas. If you don't hear from me in a long time I will be out to Sea and can't write."

"SONS O' FUN"

Any visitor who expected to find Boston in its proverbial staid frame of mind on the evening of Oct. 31 would have been disappointed. For in a theater just off the hallowed Common, Bostonians were wearing their wives' hats, offering their love letters to be read in public, stripping shirts from strangers, clutching for balloons dropped from the ceiling and lugging rolls of toilet paper about with a complete lack of abashment. Such a whirlwind of daffy, dizzy hilarity, the newspapers agreed, had never hit "the land of the bean and the cod" before.

Responsible for this unprecedented phenomenon was the opening of Sons O' Fun, Olsen and Johnson's sequel to Hellzapoppin. Everything that made Hellzapoppin, now three years old, Broadway's looniest musical riot, is doubled or trebled in Sons O' Fun.

Firecrackers explode in Chic Johnson's hat when he appears as conscientious objector at an army induction center. This is what he calls an "ocular laugh." He estimates there are 1,000 of them in his new show, each involving elaborate cues.

"Oscar! Oscar!" cries Mrs. Johnson, as she wanders intermittently down aisles. "Who's going to take care of this baby?"

A pound of coffee and "a dozen rolls" are won by this spectator in the raucous final auction. Rolls turn out to be toilet paper.

This girl got $3 for being first of three to strip off a strange man's undershirt on the stage. Her male victim received $2.

"If he can take his pants off," says a stooge seated in the audience to Ole Olsen standing on the stage, "so can I." He does.

PANICS BOSTON

The biggest, most expensive show of the new season, it rolls across the stage and into the theater aisles, at the rate of one a minute, the craziest succession of gags ever assembled in a showhouse. Included are a dummy stork that drops a baby into a woman's lap, a spectator who watches the show from the top of a 25-ft. pole, a live horse with prop antlers, a live goat, a dummy cow, a trap door down which actors catapult out of sight, a streetcar that clangs through a bedroom, a thief who walks off with a man in a bathtub and enough blank cartridges for a full-dress army battle.

Staid Bostonians snatched up $50,000 worth of tickets in advance, to squirm and howl in their seats while this bedlam raged all around them. Not until Nov. 27 will Broadway be given the same privilege.

The baby is full grown at end of the show. When Mrs. Johnson now cries, "Who'll take care of her?" everybody on stage grabs.

An "ocular" gag that drew a roar at Sons O' Fun is this one. Comic William Moran saunters on the stage and says: "I've just been knighted." Ole Olsen asks: "What's that?" Moran replies: "This is my coat of arms," and saunters nonchalantly off.

"If you can take your pants off," cries the wife of the stooge in audience, "I can take off my skirt." And she proceeds to do so.

For looking funniest wearing his wife's hat, this spectator in the audience is handed a prize by Ole Olsen. The prize is a woman's feather hat.

This pair of stooges come down the aisle, ask how to reach their upper-tier box. They get a stepladder.

A personal message from Lady MacRobert is read to the crew as MacRobert's Reply sets out on an operational flight.

MOTHER DONATES BOMBER IN MEMORY OF LOST SONS

Somewhere in England, Nov. 2, a crew of R. A. F. fliers stood gravely beneath the prow of a giant Stirling bomber and listened to a message of courage and Godspeed sent them by a lonely lady in Scotland. Before Adolf Hitler started his war against the world, Lady MacRobert, American-born widow of Sir Alexander MacRobert of Douneside, Tarland, Aberdeenshire, had three sons. Sir Alasdair was killed in a plane crash in 1938. Sir Roderic was shot down in Iraq last May. Sir Ian and his coastal command plane vanished into the sea late in June.

On July 31 Lady MacRobert mailed a check for £25,000 to Sir Archibald Sinclair, Secretary of State for Air. With it went a note, reading: "It is my wish to make a mother's immediate reply in a way that I know would be my boys' reply—attacking, striking sharply, straight to the mark. The gift of £25,000 to buy a bomber to carry on their work is the most effective way. This expresses my reaction on receiving the news about my sons. I have no more sons to wear the badge or carry it in the fight." Her plane bears on its huge prow the name MacRobert's Reply.

Lady MacRobert is an amateur geologist of distinction. Her father was a New England physician, mountaineer, explorer.

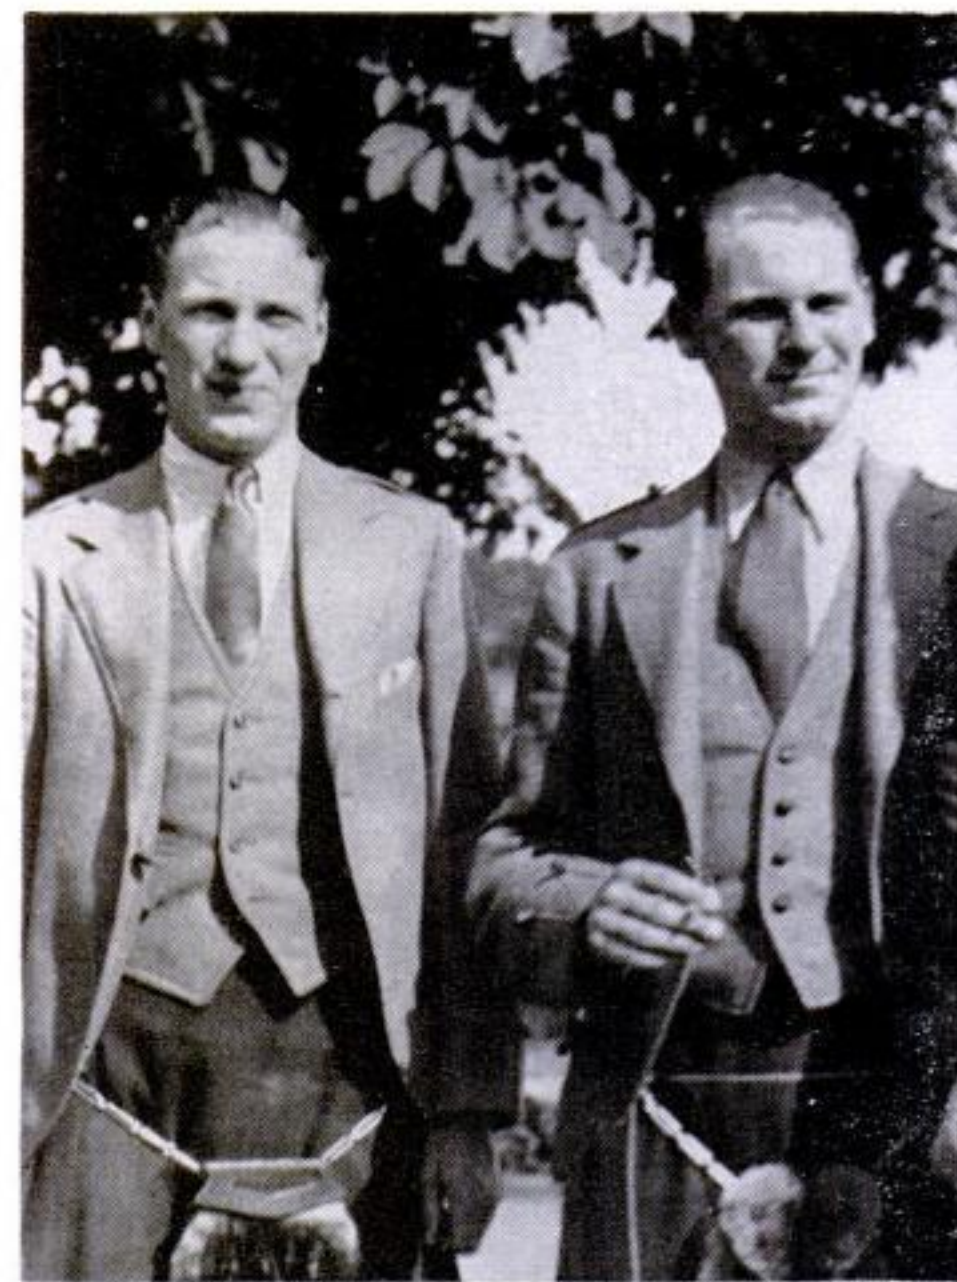

Price of a Stirling bomber goes to the Secretary of State for Air. Since losing her sons Lady MacRobert has remained alone at her Scotland home. Of her, townsfolk say: "There's nothing we can do for her. She's too great a lady for pity."

Youngest son, Sir Ian MacRobert, was the pilot of a coastal command plane. He disappeared into the North Sea, June 30.

Eldest son, Sir Alasdair (right), crashed in his own plane before the war. Sir Roderic (left) died in combat in Near East.

Beginning operations, the crew of MacRobert's Reply signal "Thumbs up" from cockpit of their great new bomber. The multi-motored Short Stirling has been called the "greatest weight-carrying plane in the world." Only exception: B-19.

MRS. VANDERBILT

THE ECHO OF AN ELEGANT ERA

In the social history of the U. S., this picture of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt in her Fifth Avenue mansion is notable. The picture can never be duplicated because the house has been sold for demolition and the dowager queen of New York society will soon move to a side street.

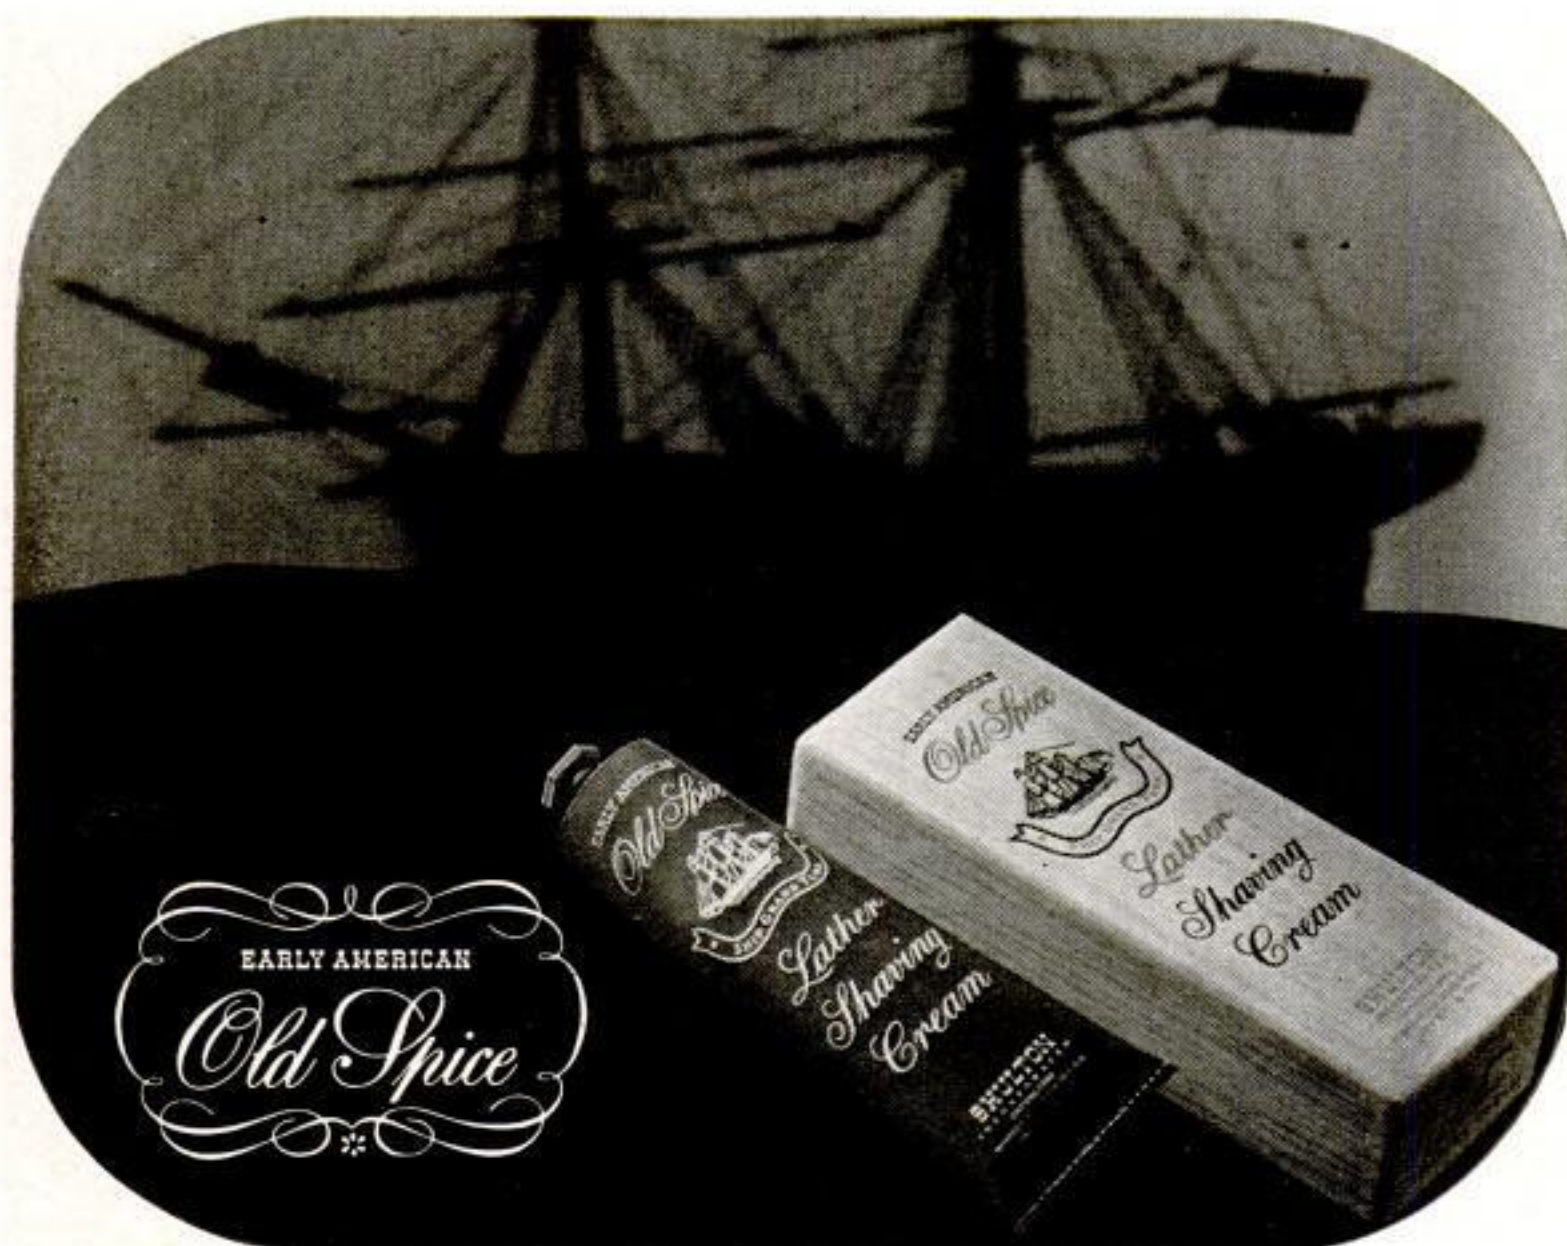

In this house Mrs. Vanderbilt received the royalty, nobility, and everyone of top social standing in America. Before the house should disappear, Vogue Magazine secured permission to photograph its lavish interiors and splendid adornments. The current Vogue devotes 22 pages, many of them in full color, to its story and publishes an article on "The House of Vanderbilt" by distinguished Editor Frank Crowninshield. Here LIFE reprints by permission several of Vogue's pictures as the last echo of an elegant era.

Mrs. Vanderbilt (continued)

MRS. VANDERBILT FEEDS 46 GUESTS

This remarkable picture of a brilliant formal dinner at Mrs. Vanderbilt's appears in the current Vogue. It is an historical document of which LIFE is admittedly envious. Throughout the years during which Mrs. Vanderbilt, at very similar affairs, has entertained such prominent Americans as Theodore Roosevelt, J. P. Morgan, Russell Sage, Herbert Hoover, General Pershing, the Astors, Belmonts, Goulds and others of the vanishing "400," such royalty and famous foreign statesmen as King Albert, the Queen of Spain, the Duke of Kent, the former Prince of Wales, Lord Balfour and Winston Churchill, no such picture has ever appeared.

At this particular dinner, Mrs. Vanderbilt's guests include, from the left on the far side of the table: Socialite Mrs. Grafton H. Pyne; J. Norman de Rapelje Whitehouse, broker; Miss Julia Berwind, wealthy Newport hostess; Peter-Arnoesque Dr. Hamilton Rice; Mrs. Truxtun Beale, widow of a diplomat; the Hon. Alfred Anson, son of the Earl of Lichfield; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, former U. S. minister to Norway; Frank Lyon Polk, onetime acting Secretary of State, great-nephew of President Polk; Mrs. James W. Gerard, whose husband (across the table on Mrs. Vanderbilt's right) was Ambassador to Germany; Ogden H. Hammond, former Ambassador to Spain; Mrs. Godfrey Haggard, wife of the British Consul General (he sat across the table, at the left of Mrs. Vanderbilt). Others, less visible in the picture, included socialites Mrs. Robert L. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Frelinghuysen, William M. Chadbourne, William Goadby Loew. At the very bottom of the picture is Mrs. Vanderbilt's young ward, Miss Valerie Moore. All this represents, as Cholly Knickerbocker (see pp. 142-149) would put it, "oodles of ducats." The only thing lacking, Emily Post writes, but note elbows on the table, some eating while others are foodless, J. Norman de Rapelje Whitehouse (second from left) using bread as a pusher.

AT FORMAL DINNER IN HER MANSION

in fact, was Mrs. Vanderbilt's husband, the General. He rarely appears.

Altogether, Mrs. Vanderbilt's dinners are surprisingly like Hollywood's conception of Mrs. Vanderbilt's dinners. As successor to the previous incumbents of the half-serious, half-comic position of Society Leader (Mrs. Belmont, Mrs. Astor & Mrs. Fish), she is carrying out a function which is acknowledged in every part of the world where tea is still drunk out of cups. She is head of the great, heterogeneous house of Vanderbilt which was founded by the original wily Commodore, ferry operator and owner of the New York Central Railroad. She is not as wealthy as some, nor of as distinguished lineage as others, but she has made a career of her job. Her occasional appearances, with bandeau, lorgnette, fox scarf, jeweled rose and diamond stomacher, always attract crowds to watch her descend the special red carpet which is unrolled on the sidewalk before her mansion. Now that she has sold it (probably because the daily property taxes for a roof over her head are $183.56) to her onetime social rivals, the English Astors, the only considerable Vanderbilt structure in New York will be Grand Central Station, depot of the New York Central.

"I feel deeply for poor, dear Marie Antoinette," said Mrs. Vanderbilt once, discussing the French Revolution, "for if the Revolution came to America, I should be the first to go." This statement was no appeal for sympathy. Mrs. Vanderbilt was demanding precedence. She was, in effect, serving notice on the proletariat that there is to be no confusion of rank in the arrangements for the Terror. Her only mistake was the failure to notice that the Revolution as far as the "400" is concerned—with tax collectors for sans-culottes and March 15 for Bastille Day—is already here.

Four Nutrition-wise Modern Mothers

Speak for Millions who now use Nucoa

This delicious modern margarine fits ideally into today's "nutrition for defense" program. It enriches family meals in flavor and food-energy at low cost... guarantees in each pound over 9,000 units of "protective VITAMIN A."

"I CAN DEPEND ON VITAMIN A in NUCOA for my children. Over 9,000 units in each pound! And NUCOA is guaranteed never to go below this amount—winter or summer!" Naturally, this pleases young Mrs. Russell, of Syracuse, N. Y.! "NUCOA," she says, "is my idea of a modern food—delicious, yet so scientifically controlled, I know exactly what I am giving my children. I know NUCOA'S calorie count... its Vitamin A count... and my children's eager fists answer for its flavor!"

"THE MONEY NUCOA SAVES US certainly shows up on our food bills," says alert, farm-raised Mrs. W. D. Wilson. "Of course, with four children in the family, I couldn't afford this saving if it meant scrimping on food value. But I know it doesn't. I learned about NUCOA through attending lectures on Dietetics at our University Hill Nursery School. I know that NUCOA is approved by dietitians and accepted by the American Medical Association, Council on Foods and Nutrition. And since we all like NUCOA, I consider this a sensible way to stretch our food dollars."

THERE'S AS MUCH FOOD-ENERGY in NUCOA as in any churned spread for bread—3,300 calories per pound! Ideal for active folk like these young Hendleys, of Atlanta, Ga.; for, as Mrs. Hendley says, "They can have all the 'bread 'n NUCOA' their appetites demand—and we can have the luxurious richness of NUCOA in all our cooking—without extravagant cost! And NUCOA is so wholesome and digestible!" Yes, NUCOA'S pure vegetable oils are churned in fresh pasteurized skim milk—and both are products of American farms. This is one of the reasons why women today find this modern margarine so different from the old-time "oleos," "NUCOA'S FRESH, SWEET FLAVOR is grand in uncooked icings," praises Mrs. W. W. Loveland, mother of Barbara and Washington, Jr. Their high spirits and brimming health speak well for the family diet, in which NUCOA is used—on the table and in cooking. "NUCOA gives my cakes and pan-fried dishes the real, old-fashioned rich taste," says Mrs. Loveland. "We like our vegetables and sauces seasoned with NUCOA. And we like NUCOA'S invariable fresh taste on hot breads as well as cold." Yes, NUCOA passes the flavor test even on hot toast, for NUCOA is always fresh. It is made the year round on order only—never stored. "Its velvety texture is just right, too," Mrs. Loveland adds. "Easy to cream and to spread!"

JAYNE BROMELL, B. S. Home Economics
University of New Mexico, 1933

WE NUTRITIONISTS AGREE WITH THESE MOTHERS ABOUT DELICIOUS NUCOA. THE FIRST MARGARINE TO ADD VITAMIN A, IT IS A YEAR-ROUND GOOD SOURCE OF THIS IMPORTANT ELEMENT. HELPS BALANCE THE BUDGET AND THE DIET, TOO!

For table use, tint NUCOA golden-yellow with the pure Color-Wafer included in each package. For cooking, use it just as it comes—a pure, natural white!

FIFTY-CALIBER BULLETS, IN CLOSE-RANGE BARRAGE, RIP THROUGH THIN, QUARTER-INCH AIRCRAFT ARMOR. TRACERS SHOW PATH OF BULLETS THROUGH AND BEYOND ARMOR

AIRCRAFT ARMOR

IT MUST COMBINE A MINIMUM OF
WEIGHT WITH MAXIMUM STRENGTH

Combat planes, like any other war machines, represent a precise equation of the fighting formula of firepower, speed, range and armor. In the design of planes, however, armor comes last. Until the end of World War I, the planes and pilots flew with no armor at all, behind the protection of a flimsy alloy of luck and skill. Modern planes have weight to spare only for minimum armor to protect their vital organs and essential members of their crews.

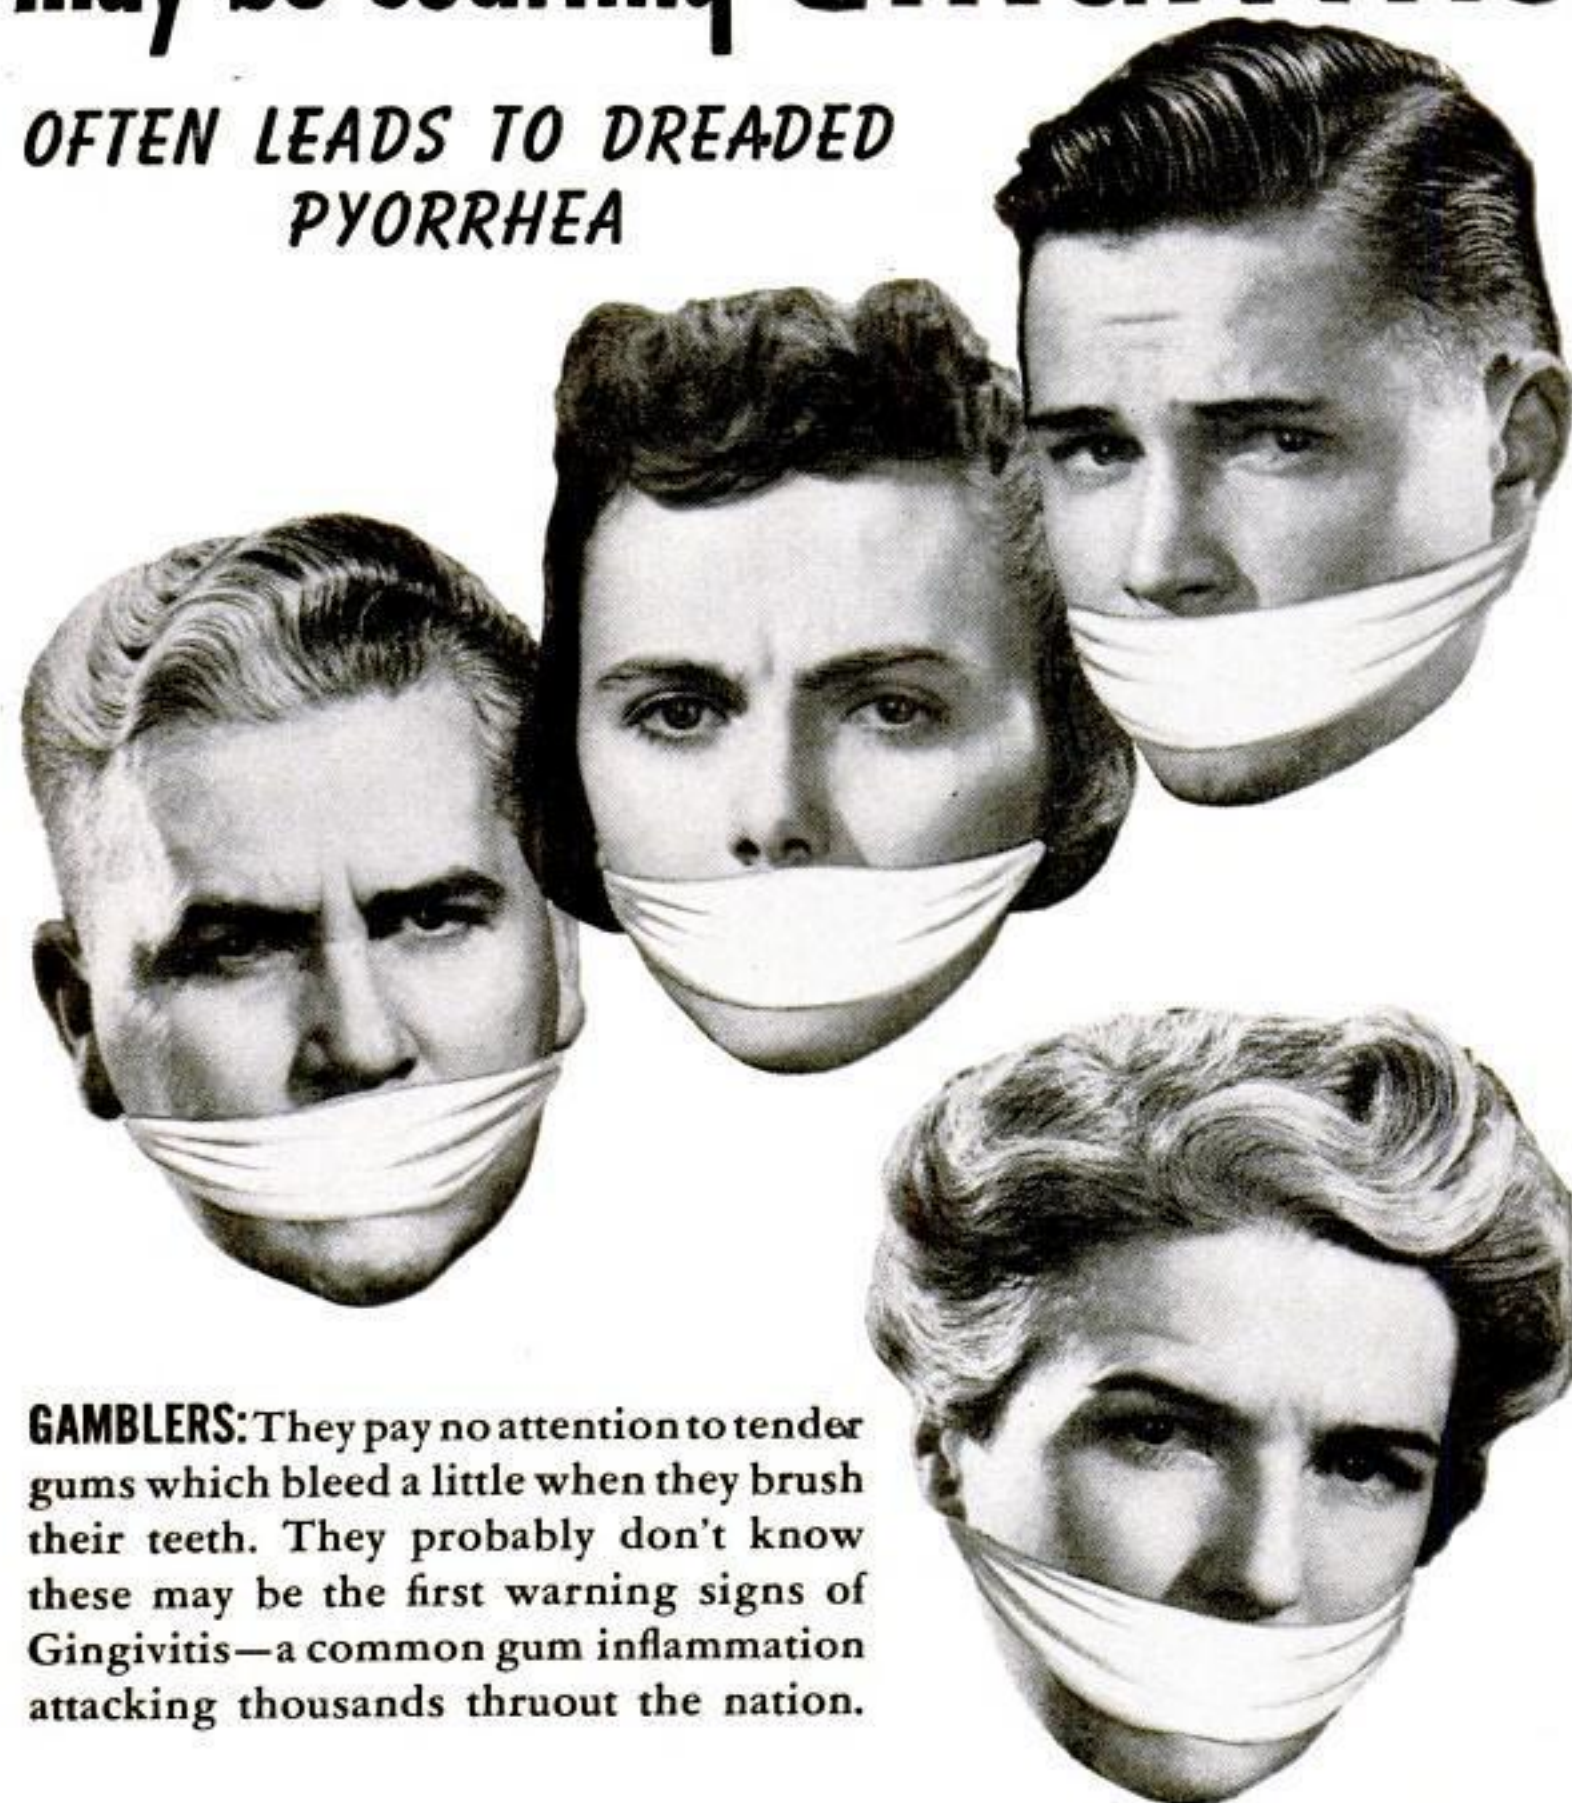

In illustration of the problem, a sheet of light quarter-inch aircraft armor, produced by the Breeze Corporation, Newark, N. J., is here shown penetrated by a close-range barrage of 50-cal. machine-gun bullets. In a heavier gauge, however, this armor can easily withstand such punishment. The goal is to find the minimum thickness of armor that will provide maximum protection. Shaped in shells and plates, armor in a plane is apportioned to protect strategic spots from the major volume of the fire they will face. But planes still disintegrate under square hits by explosive shells.

The boy whose family gave him a Royal Portable

... but seriously

YOU'LL FIND that the Royal Portable you give your son as a steppingstone to higher grades* will prove invaluable to the whole family.

Dad will find it immensely helpful in his personal business—Mother, in her social correspondence and club work.

And it's easy to learn to type. (An ingenious "Self Teacher" comes with every Royal, through whose use even a 10-year old can learn in a matter of hours!) The knowledge of typing so gained will be not only a form of job-insurance for the youngsters—but a door-opener to the kind of job that leads to the top!

Yes, a Royal Portable is one gift that will truly benefit every member of the family.

*Tests made with thousands of school children show that those who do their work on typewriters average 10% to 30% higher grades in many subjects . . . concentrate better . . . do 17% more written homework . . . think faster and more clearly. Why? Because the greater speed and ease of typing free a youngster's mind for thinking . . . give wings to his imagination—instead of shackling his thoughts to the slow, tedious progress of a pencil!

Typing teachers recommend Royal as the Portable for home use, because it's the make with a keyboard just like that on a regular office machine. Nothing to un-learn! Consider all these "big-machine" features of the Royal:

Greatest typing timesaver in years!

MAGIC* Margin . . . no more fussing with mechanism to change and set the margin. Just flick the handy lever—click . . . and it's set! Only Royal has MAGIC Margin!

Segment Shift—Less noise . . . less eyestrain when you shift on a Royal. The carriage doesn't clatter and pop up!

"Big-machine" Keyboard—One reason typing teachers recommend the Royal for home use—it has a keyboard just like that on a standard office machine.

Touch Control*—Simply move this lever to adjust key tension exactly to your touch. This is one reason Cortez Peters won the World's Portable Typing Championship on a Royal!

No Type-bar Blur! Type bars flash unseen on a Royal. This, and the over-all "no glare" finish of the machine mean less eyestrain.

Automobile-type Shock Absorbers—Rubber-cushion feet and jar-proof construction give the Royal Portable the sturdy, "weighty" touch of the full-sized machine.

Handsome Case and "Self Teacher" included with every Royal Portable at no extra cost.

FOR JUST ABOUT $1 A WEEK, you can own a Royal Portable! Your local dealer is authorized to sell you any Royal on an easy-payment plan which includes the small carrying charge.

COMMANDO RAID ON BARDIA

SPECIALLY TRAINED BRITISH BANDS STEALTHILY ATTACK AXIS STRONGHOLDS IN LIBYA AT NIGHT

by EVELYN WAUGH

COMMANDOS ARE A BRITISH INNOVATION

One of the great hush-hush stories of the war is the mysterious work of Britain's commandos, small bands of specially trained volunteers who raid Axis-held territory. They are called commandos after the Portuguese expression for a small band of armed men. A good commando fighter, known jokingly as a "Churchill Marine," should have the imagination of a mystery writer, the cunning of a burglar, the endurance of an Olympic athlete and the patriotism of a hero.

Commandos are a British innovation in this war, organized after Dunkirk to rough up Germans in the Occupied Lowlands and France, carry out sabotage and spy on the enemy. The first known commando raid came a few days after the fall of France. Champion British long-distance swimmers dove overboard in the Channel and swam to the hostile French shore at night to destroy communications. By now raids are made almost nightly on France and occasionally on Belgium and Holland. The raiders, known locally as "black phantoms," wear black skullcaps and blacken their faces and hands. On other dark nights commandos raid Italy, disembarking from submarines and paddling to shore in collapsible canoes.

Last week a British officer revealed that during Wavell's Libyan offensive a year ago, a commando of 60 men raided the Italian stronghold of Bardia, blew up a munitions dump and shot several Italians. Two of the raiders were shot. One escaped through the sewer which emptied into the sea.

Now with the Axis again in possession of Bardia and most of Libya, the commandos are more active than ever. One of their number is Evelyn Waugh (pronounced Evelynn Waw) who wrote this eyewitness account for LIFE of a recent raid on Bardia.

EVELYN WAUGH

Waugh is a graduate of Oxford, the son of British Publisher Arthur Waugh and brother of Novelist Alec Waugh. He won fame as a novelist himself by writing sophisticated satire about smart British socialites (Decline and Fall, Vile Bodies). When this war began he joined the British Marines and after Dunkirk was among the first to volunteer for commando work.

Remember the conditions in England in the days between Dunkirk and the first air battle of Britain? Half-trained battalions suddenly found themselves first line troops. The bulk of the regular Army was reorganising and rearming. The Home Guard was untrained and short of equipment. Invasion was expected daily. In Poland, Norway and France we had found that one of the chief dangers to a defending force was the breakdown of communications between its large units. The need of the moment was for small bodies of picked fighting troops who, in the event of higher commands being paralyzed, would be able to carry on independently and, without the machinery of full-scale operations, mount sharp little counterattacks on their own. This was the original idea of the formation of commandos. They were literally picked men. First the commanders were chosen. They were all young men of an age when, normally, they would have had companies and squadrons. They were now given the task of raising their own forces.

My own commander, who eventually came to command the force put under him in the Middle East, was the commander par excellence. He had succeeded in combining life in the most fashionable cavalry regiment with a brilliant career at the Staff College, and such feats of toughness as sailing round the world as an ordinary seaman in a Finnish windjammer. An order was circulated in the Army asking for volunteers from officers and men for hazardous service. The supply greatly exceeded the demand. The commanders picked their officers and left them to pick their men.

There is a universal danger in all armies that, when volunteers are called to leave their regiments for special service, the worst get sent. No company commander wishes to lose good men; they all have some troublesome fellow they are glad to pass on. To avoid this our troop leaders visited the regimental depots, saw each man individually, looked up his records, talked to his former officers. The qualities they were seeking were simply the qualities of any good soldier—physical strength and endurance, fighting spirit, knowledge of his weapons, enterprise. There was nothing peculiar about our men. They were simply the best types of the regiments from which they came.

The officers were mostly from the Household Brigade. They got the reputation of being exclusively recruited from the very rich and very gay but there was a fair proportion of industrious professional soldiers to preserve the balance. I remember well my impression on first joining. The commando was at that time living in Scotland and the officers' mess was at a seaside hotel. I had come from the austerity and formality of the Royal Marines. In a Marine mess it is thought disgraceful to sit down before 6 in the evening; those who have nothing to do must pretend that they have. I found a young troop leader wearing a military tunic and corduroy trousers. He was reclining in a comfortable chair, a large cigar in his mouth. Then I noticed above the pocket of his coat the ribbon of the Military Cross, and later when I saw him with his troop I realized that his men would follow him anywhere. The names among our officers of Jellicoe, Keyes, Beatty and Churchill showed how the sons of the last war's leaders saw in the commandos the chance of reliving their fathers' achievements. There was something of the spirit which one reads in the letters and poetry of 1914. We had a more elastic system of discipline than is possible in an ordinary battalion. There was none of that daily succession of petty charges and petty punishments. If a man was a nuisance he was simply sent back to his regiment. All were volunteers and all proud of the additional rigors of their training. So as to cut down administration to a minimum and to have no one with us who was not a fighting man, we were simply paid a subsistence allowance and, ashore, left to find our own food and lodging. Troops were taught to live on the country and hunt for their food. A book could, and no doubt will be, written about the commandos in their aspect as an experiment in military organization. The object of this digression is merely to give an idea of the sort of force we were and the sort of work we meant to do.

We formed a pool from which detachments could be drawn when there was a special job for us. We had parties in Tobruk, in Crete, in Syria, and another detached for special reconnaissance with the Navy. We had our full share of medals and casualties. The following is an account of one small operation, a bloodless one, which was neatly planned and executed, typical of the special tasks for which we trained.

Bardia lies behind the enemy lines, between Salûm and Tobruch in Libya. It is a harbor and a small town. The supply road to Fort Capuzzo and the forward enemy troops runs through it. British G. H. Q. wanted a raid there for several reasons. They wanted information—were the enemy garrisoning the town or encamped some distance away (i. e., was it worthwhile shelling and bombing it any more)? Were Germans or Italians there? Were there coast defense guns? Was it being used, as was reported, as a transport depot? More important than the information was the need to draw off enemy mechanized troops who were pressing uncomfortably on our front line. The enemy must be made to “look over his shoulder” and withdraw men from the front to guard his lines of communication. If possible he must be made to think that a full-scale attack was being attempted in his rear and to rush large mechanized forces to Bardia that were needed elsewhere. As a minor consideration any damage we could do to roads, bridges or stores would be welcome. A single commando was chosen for the job. As things turned out, it could have been done by half the number, but we expected to find at least two battalions of enemy troops in possession of Bardia.

The secret was well kept

Our parent force had another job on that night—250 men on a destroyer raiding farther up the Libyan coast. We could see them embarking at the quay opposite ours, while we stood waiting in the big, fast merchantman that had been fitted out for our purpose. The Bardia attacking party was under the command of its own colonel. We were guests at this assault. But we had been at work for a week on the details of the plan, gazing, until we squinted, at air photographs, checking and rechecking the timetable. We wanted to see our plan in action.

The secret had been well kept. I do not believe that a word of our intention got to the swarm of spies which infest Alexandria. Had the cat jumped out of the bag, our raid would not have gone as well as it did. We got away in cover of darkness, as we had to arrive at our station, four miles off the coast, at 11 p. m. Then we had to leave again in the darkness, with at least two hours sailing time before dawn for all the coast around Bardia was patrolled by enemy aircraft. This meant that allowing an hour each way between ship and beach we had just three hours ashore. It was not long but it was long enough if everything went right. Everyone understood that the timetable was inexorable, that if he was late on his beach, or if he went to the wrong beach, he must look out for himself. There was a sporting chance of being able later to get through the enemy line and join up with our troops near Salûm.

Bardia is on a small promontory where the cliffs rise up sharply from the seashore. There are four possible landing places where wadies (watercourses that are usually dry) break the face of the rocks and leave a little half circle of sand. A party was to land on each of these beaches simultaneously. Each troop had its own task. From the moment they left the ship until the moment they returned aboard, they would receive no further orders. Each had his objective. One unit was to hold the road against the arrival of enemy re-inforcements. One unit was to cover each beach. Another was to blow a bridge on the road, while another unit destroyed stores and so on. Each troop had to tackle in its own way whatever opposition it found. These orders were kept entirely secret until we were at sea. The day's sailing was a blessing. It gave time to issue maps, photographs and written orders, for the troop leaders to master them and explain them fully to their men, so that everyone of them was capable of carrying on by himself if need be.

The only unhappy people on board were the half dozen or so who had been detailed to remain on board as rear party, the orderly room clerk, the quartermaster's batman, the rear signaling party, and so on. During the day each of them came to me and sought to be allowed to go ashore. I managed to fit most of them in under one excuse or another.

"My heart stood still!" said Laraine Day

What happened when she saw the most spectacular achievement in Silverplate History

"LARAINE DAY, now appearing in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Unholy Partners, says her heart did a little flip-flop when she first saw 'Eternally Yours,'" reports Conrad Nagel, director of 1847 Rogers Bros.' famous Silver Theater of the radio.*

"The loveliness of this pattern is enough to steal any girl's heart," she said. "It's the most gorgeous creation I ever laid eyes on! I've never seen such beauty... even in fine sterling!"

"So I told Laraine that there was good reason for her to be amazed. I explained how new skills in silver-making technique have made possible sparkling heights of ornament rare in even the finest sterling. When I pointed out such things as the open-work in the knife handles, the perfect balance, clean-cut contours, and lovely, high, floral design, she agreed that 'Eternally Yours' is a masterpiece, of which any craftsman would be proud.

"Certainly," she said, "the beauty of 'Eternally Yours' will make it an object of affection for many, many years!"

Your favorite 1847 Rogers Bros. dealer has recently placed "Eternally Yours" on display. Be sure to see this sensational design! Though this new pattern is more expensive to produce, it costs no more than other 1847 Rogers Bros. patterns. A service for six in "Eternally Yours" costs but $34.50, including Federal Tax. Look for the famous year-mark 1847 on each piece. International Silver Company, Meriden, Conn.

FUNNY HOW OFTEN a man's thoughts wander back to his boyhood home—and all the little things he knew as a kid.

That squeaky stair, the second from the top—the worn place your pup scratched on the door when he wanted to follow you to school—the promise of warmth and comfort as mother's "Come in now—supper's ready" cut through the chill November dusk.

But most of all, you remember home by your heart. Just a wistful feeling of tenderness that comes over you when your thoughts go drifting homeward.

Sometimes, when you're thinking these thoughts, a big feeling of thanks fills you. And you wish, somehow, you could tell the folks back home how precious they are—and how dear the home they made for you.

That's why we're going to remind you that Thanksgiving Day is coming. And that there is a way to tell your mother and dad your heart is with them—even though you're miles away. Simply wire them flowers. They'll say the tender, loving things you long to say—but cannot put into words.

There was a suggestion that we should get some sleep between dusk and the time for manning the boats, but everyone was too cheerful to rest. They were sharpening bayonets, disposing grenades about their persons, blacking gym shoes. It reminded me of the scene in The Wind in the Willows where Badger prepares the attack on Toad Hall.

Toward evening the breeze began to freshen and we grew anxious for we had been turned home once before by bad weather. It is a ticklish business landing in the dark on a strange beach in any kind of surf. It is seldom really dark in the Mediterranean but tonight the stars were overcast. Standing to, on deck, we could barely see the guard rail or distinguish between the sea and sky. We were in position at our boat stations half an hour before the ship reached her destination. Then we heard the engine stop and we silently manned the boats. One sits in these boats in three lines, astride low seats. The bows have a ramp which lets down so that all three lines can pull out together. It takes less than half a minute for 30 men to clear the boat. The boats are comfortable enough in a calm sea for a short trip. But with four miles to go in rough water they are not so pleasant.

The boats were lowered, formed line abreast and made for the shore. Our heads were all below the level of the armored sides. It was impossible to move a muscle. The man on my left was sick. The only movement he was capable of was to turn his head slightly toward me. Most of the men fell asleep, as the excitement had died down, and those of us who were awake thought about particular minor discomforts and looked forward to the beach or the chance to stretch.

"Stand by to land"

At last a whisper passed back from the bow: "Stand by to land" and we felt the bottom scrape on the shingle. The ramp went down. We pressed forward into knee-deep water and up the steep ledge of beach. Two men near me fell flat and got up dripping and cursing very quietly. There was a minute on the beach while the section leaders collected their men behind them. Then, without a word spoken, they were off to their objectives.

We could just discern the line of the escarpment ahead, slightly more solid than the starless sky. I had been busy with a watch and notebook checking the time of the boats beaching and disembarking. It had all gone off as smoothly as a training exercise. The boats hit the beach in line, emptied and reversed their engines. They were out of sight in one direction and the men out of sight in the other within a few seconds.

Something is wrong up front, however, and I go forward to find what it is. I find three parallel lines of men crossing a deep, water-logged anti-tank ditch that had not been visible in any of the air photographs. No tank could conceivably climb the opposing wadi. It seems an odd place for a ditch, but there it is and crossing it cost us 20 minutes, for in the dark we cannot let men scatter as we would in daylight. They must keep within touch of one another, and the first must wait for the last to come up with them. It was a beast of a ditch.

Climbing a wadi at night

After the ditch was crossed, the climb started. We had studied it in the spectroscope but comforted ourselves with the reflection that everything looks steeper than it is through this device. Our wadi was precipitous and composed of loose stones. All through our training we had practiced moving at night, and on roads or solid rock we were almost noiseless as we wore rubber or rope-soled boots. Now, however, the din of 150 men scrambling up in the darkness seemed deafening. Stones came thudding down from above, gathering little avalanches as they came. Suddenly there were three rapid shots and bullets sang out overhead. The line paused for half a second and then pushed on. In the lull I thought: "That's bitched it. They've let us get ashore and now they have caught us very nicely on the cliff face. We were not as clever as we thought at keeping the secret." But when we pushed forward again there were no more shots and I thought, "It was a single sentry. He's gone back to raise the garrison. But we shall be on the top by the time they are in position."

In spite of hard training the climb took it out of us. We were rather behind our timetable. It was now a quarter to one and at a quarter past two we should begin withdrawal to the boats. That did not allow much time for delay, but the forward parties were already well on their way into the town. No sound came from them and we suddenly realized that the place was empty. Force H. Q. set up as an observation post near a great assembly of derelict motor lorries. Behind us a troop was searching for a transport unit which had been reported there. In front another troop was entering the former Italian barracks. Further on again the other troops which had landed lower down were pushing up into the further side of the town. There was complete silence for about half an hour. We knew that the various parties were getting to their objectives and setting their demolition charges. Suddenly from all sides the detonations began. We were able to plot them pretty exactly: "That's the coast defense battery on the hill;" "That's the road bridge." At the same time a splendid red fire mounted and curled half a mile away in the old barracks. They had found a store of new motor tires—a precious thing in the desert—and it blazed gloriously.

There was still no sign of the enemy. At last a patrol of two motorcycles, driving all out and without lights, came roaring down the main road. Everyone near had a shot at them with Tommy guns and grenades but they somehow got through. They were not an easy target. It was very lucky really that they did escape for it was through them that the enemy learned, as we particularly wanted them to learn, that a landing was taking place. Had they merely seen the blaze and heard the demolition charges from a distance they might have taken us for an air raid. As it was, the impression which these men carried away was of a town strongly in enemy hands and it was due to their report that our major success was achieved. They did exactly what the British higher command wanted and sent a strong detachment of tanks and armored cars to repel the imagined invasion.

One barge founders

The work finished, we returned to our beaches. The way down was lighted by the burning stores, where flames now mounted high into the sky. The boats had been lying off and now came into the beaches. The wind had risen. There was a heavy surf pounding the shingle and washing over the ledges of sand. The naval party had a job to keep the boats head in to shore and one boat got her propeller screw fouled in the kedge anchor, broached to and was thrown up onto the shelf of sand. They destroyed her with a grenade in the petrol tank and the little bay was lit up by this second fire so that we should have made an easy target for an enemy on the heights above. But no enemy came. The sea was a great deal heavier than was healthy for these flat-bottomed, rather awkward craft and all had difficulties of one kind or another getting away. I was in one of the large M. L. C.'s. Her ramp got jammed and for half an hour we floated in the bay while all the other boats disappeared back to the ship. Finally two men cut through a steel cable with a bayonet and we eventually got her going and came alongside the ship just as they had despaired of us. One boat failed to find the rendezvous but sailed safely into Tobruch next day.

As we sailed we saw parachute flares dropping over the town from enemy reconnaissance planes. The timetable had worked out right to the minute, with nothing to spare. The only misadventure which marred the success of the night was the loss of a boatload of men who from the top of the escarpment took the wrong wadi and found themselves on a beach where there was no boat waiting. But we had made all our objectives.

Another lesson that commandos are taught in England before being sent out on a raid is how to stalk, kill, dress and cook wild game and thus live off the enemy countryside.

alternately with about  $\frac{1}{2}$  c. of Presto at a time. Stir smooth after each addition.
Fold in..... 2 egg whites beaten stiff. When smooth, divide batter in 2 layer cake pans, greased, bottoms lined with waxed paper and the paper greased. Bake. Cool. If white edge is desired, rub with finger and roll off the brown crust around edges only. When ready to serve, cover one layer with peppermint candy ice cream, or any other desired flavor. Top with second layer. Pour over this layer hot chocolate frosting (recipe below). For individual service, bake in large muffin pans. Bake. Cool. Split.
BAKE: 375°—25 to 30 minutes. MAKES: 2—8-inch layers.

HOT CHOCOLATE FROSTING

In saucepan, melt..... 2 tbsp. butter
And..... 2 squares unsweetened chocolate.
Add..... 1 c. confectioners' sugar
And.....  $\frac{1}{4}$  tsp. salt
Also..... 1 tsp. vanilla.
Add one at a time..... 3 tbsp. boiling water. Stir smooth after each addition. Pour hot over cake. Let run down over edges—do not spread. Serve immediately.
Remember—no baking powder or salt when you use Presto Cake Flour.

Even if you're already "head-of-the-class" in cake-baking, you're due for a great big surprise the first time you use Presto Cake Flour! Even "old hands" at cake-baking are amazed at the results.

Your best cake will be even better. Your lightest, highest cakes will be still lighter and higher.

Scientific Blending Does It

Presto is a very fine, specially milled cake flour combined with exactly the right amount of baking powder and salt scientifically measured and blended as you couldn't possibly do it yourself.

Presto saves you tricky measuring and tedious sifting (that you know are so important to perfect cakes). Not only that but the measuring is done so scientifically—the blending so thoroughly—that in actual tests cakes are lighter and higher than when the very same ingredients are home-measured and home-sifted over and over again.

Presto eliminates mistakes that cause most of the baking failures, such as the wrong amount or wrong type of baking powder (or salt), faulty mixing, or forgetting either of these ingredients.

Presto, new idea in cake flour (with baking powder and salt scientifically measured and blended right into it), makes higher, lighter cakes—saves tedious mixing.

This ice cream party cake will show you that Presto does make cake-baking something entirely new, much simpler—and far better in results. Use Presto, too, for extra-fine waffles, muffins, and biscuits. Just the thing for the modern small home—it takes so little room and does so many things. It sells at everyday prices. Try it today.

HOW TO SPONSOR A NEW SHIP

ETIQUET HINTS FOR CHRISTENING

With Rear Admiral Land promising "two ships a day to keep the Nazis away," no woman in the U. S. can tell when she may be called upon to sponsor a battleship, tanker or glorified dinghy. If Fletcher, Taylor, Bennett, Bristol, Rodman, Forrest, Hobson, or any other illustrious Navy name appears in her family tree, she might as well get a dummy bottle and start practicing against the door jamb. On the other hand, female descendants of families that have always abhorred the sea are by no means immune. The ways in which a sponsor is selected are devious.

U. S. battleships bear names of States, and the governor of the State in question determines who shall be its godmother. Cruisers are named after cities, hence the city's mayor selects the sponsor. Destroyers bear the names of naval heroes or outstanding citizens and the Navy scurries about looking for a likely female descendant or relative. Submarines are named for fish. To wives of high-ranking naval officers usually falls the honor of saying, "I christen thee TUNA."

Every woman sponsor of a U. S. Navy ship is invited to join the Society of Sponsors of the U. S. Navy. Thereupon she pays dues of $4 a year for the privilege of worrying about the crew's families.

For merchant ships, there are no set national rules. The sponsoring usually falls to the female relatives of company executives, but it might fall to the foreman's wife, the gray-haired schoolmarm who gave the ship's architect his first arithmetic lesson, or the shipyard's favorite sweater girl.

For the hundreds of prospective ship sponsors who any day now may find in the mail a formal invitation, LIFE here presents some hints and points of etiquette which should prove helpful. With the cooperation of the U. S. Navy, Rear Admiral Harold G. Bowen, Former Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. Hurley and their daughter Ruth Noel Hurley, a ship christening was re-enacted. For correct attire, stance, grasp of bottle, and general deportment befitting the sponsor of a ship, see captions on this and following pages.

RUTH HURLEY, SPONSOR OF SINCLAIR TANKER NAMED AFTER HER FATHER, WEARS OFFICIAL BADGE AND CORSAGE

Footwork practice is advisable before the ceremony. Step forward on left foot, throw imaginary bottle, step back quickly.

Proper attire includes snug hat, gloves, a rather full skirt. All impedimenta, such as handbag, should be disposed of.

Christening bottle, plaited with red, white and blue ribbons, is handed, bottom-up, to the sponsor by the officiating officer.

Better Breads are baked with Dextrose

From New York to San Francisco, from Chicago to New Orleans, most of America's biggest-selling, best-known brands of bread are baked with Dextrose. It helps give quality breads superior flavor, color, texture and food value.

America's Greatest Blessing is Delicious Daily Bread

THE PLENITUDE of America is symbolized by the abundance and low cost of its superior daily bread. Every year, more than 10½ billion loaves* of fresh, fragrant bakery bread are available for the enjoyment and sustenance of everyone, everywhere in the land. This nutritious bread is the finest in the world today; it is rich in flavor and food value; it provides protein, essential vitamins, minerals and carbohydrates.

The energy value of bread is high. One slice yields about 65 calories—sufficient to enable you to walk a mile or to think for an entire day. And in dollars and cents this vital food energy is derived from bread at less cost than any comparable food. Thus should we regard our daily bread as the most important of our basic foods.

In seeking to improve the texture, digestibility and general appetite-appeal of bread, leading bakers exhaustively tested each ingredient of their loaves.

It is significant therefore that the baking industry uses millions of pounds of Dextrose sugar every year.

By laboratory tests, thousands of bakers proved that Dextrose sugar helps to give bread the superior color, bloom, texture and fine eating qualities the American public prefers.

Dextrose is a pure, white sparkling sugar in crystalline form, mildly sweet and cooling to taste. Aside from its established food-energy value as the basic "fuel" sugar of the human body, Dextrose possesses certain unique properties which generally improve the flavor and texture of many processed foods.

Wherever you buy, you will find many high-quality products "enriched with Dextrose". They have fine flavor and texture—true food value.

BETTER FOODS ARE ENRICHED WITH

DEXTROSE

AN ALL AMERICAN SUGAR

Recognition of the value of Dextrose sugar is gaining momentum in many branches of the food industry. Bakers, soft-drink bottlers, confectioners, ice cream makers, canners of fruits and fruit juices are among the many manufacturers now adapting Dextrose to the improvement of their products.

*While the baking industry ranks second in food processing (by dollars), it is first in the number of year-round wage earners, first in number of producing plants, first in wages paid. The baking business serves a three-fold function—it provides essential foods, it is an important employer of labor and a great buyer of equipment and farm commodities.

America can supply every pound of Dextrose sugar needed for American consumption. Dextrose, derived from America's greatest grain—golden Corn, is wholly, completely American. It is refined in American factories by American workers and distributed by American companies.

DUCK PASSION: ENRAGED AT A RIVAL HANGING AROUND HIS FEMALE, A COURTING MALLARD DRAKE SETS OUT TO LAUNCH A FURIOUS QUACKING ATTACK ON THE INTRUDER

WATERFOWL

THEY ARE NOW WINGING SOUTH
AFTER A WET AND HAPPY SUMMER

Photographs for LIFE by Lorene Squire

There was plenty of water this year all over the great U. S. waterfowl nesting grounds. Lorene Squire, the famous bird photographer, spent a good part of the year on assignment from LIFE, taking pictures along the mid-continent bird flyway. She found that potholes and sloughs which had dried up and disappeared were now suddenly reappearing like magic on the prairies. "This was swell for ducks," reported Miss Squire, "but terrible for photography because ducks were scattered everywhere instead of concentrated in restricted marsh areas."

Despite her complaint, Miss Squire has produced a magnificent record of one of the great phenomena of nature, the annual migration of the birds. From long before dawn on cold January mornings through hot September afternoons, she stalked the wary birds—in Louisiana marshes, up Arkansas rivers, along South Dakota sloughs. These pictures, which will be included in a formal exhibition of her work next winter at New York's Sporting Gallery and Bookshop, add to her reputation as the country's best duck photographer. Right now the subjects of her photographs, after a healthy and happy summer, are winging south in flocks bigger than the prairie has known for years.

DUCK MOTHER LOVE: ALARMED BY INTRUDER, MOTHER BLUE-WINGED TEAL TRIES WOUNDED-WING HOAX, TRAILS WING THROUGH WATER WHILE YOUNG SCURRY INTO REEDS

A great gathering of geese rises out of the stubble of a farm in the James River Valley in South Dakota. They flutter over the cornfield before wheeling into formation and starting out again on their long journey. These are blue geese and snow geese which eat the same kind of food and winter together in huge flocks of as many as 50,000 or more. In migration their flocks are smaller but still enormous. It was estimated that there were approximately 5,000 geese in the whole flock shown in the picture above. Faster than most birds, these geese fly at speeds up to 50 m. p. h. and sometimes ascend to altitudes of more than 5,000 ft. to get out of the way of storms. The breeding grounds of the blue goose were a great ornithological mystery until a few years ago when its nests were found on and near Baffin Island. Blue geese are bright enough to be seen on a haystack," she said.

leave their nests when they can hunt tion and after hatching, help out with defending the young to the females.

Geese and budding cottonwood trees are signs of spring along the James River. Here blue geese in V-formation fly over the fuzzy trees. The blue goose comes north just after the Canada goose (opposite page) and keeps going all the way up to the Arctic.

The Canada goose comes north first, along with the mallard and pintail ducks. In their urgent rush, the big birds fly some 200 miles a day through good weather and bad, stopping only to feed and rest a little. They reach their prairie nesting grounds even before the snow has melted away. Their nests are built and their young hatched before the late-coming ducks have even chosen their nesting spots. Canada geese are exceptionally faithful fowl. Once a pair have mated, they stay together year after year all the rest of their long lives.

Mated mallards swim on a lake in springtime. The mallard drake woos a female by dipping his bill in and out of water and executing fancy aquatic feats or standing on his tail in water. Once accepted, however, the male mallard grows coy and the female has to keep after him.

Redhead ducks come from south and east to nest on the prairie. Only during mating season does the redhead drake acquire a voice. Usually silent, he now murmurs fondly at his mate with a catlike miaou, stretches his bright red-and-black neck far out to kindle her admiration.

Scaup, which are diving ducks, have a pleasant way of making love. The female swims up to the male and bows her head at him a few times. The male responds by throwing his head back and uttering a single gentle quack, different from his usual harsh call of scaup, scaup.

A pair of pintails bob along in the water. An impatient bird, sometimes the pintail drake starts his wooing on the way north. He makes most of his advances while on the wing, whistling eagerly at a female as he flies along. Pintails come north early, start back south early too.

An expectant mother gadwall duck squats on her nest in the tall marsh grass, making the perfect picture of maternal satisfaction. Underneath her downy breast, in a neat nest built of grass, are ten creamy white eggs. They were laid at the respectable rate of one egg a day.

Frightened off by human approach, the mother gadwall starts suddenly from her nest, the eggs in which show plainly at bottom of the picture. She whirrs her long, pointed wings as she flies, will probably use the old but effective broken wing trick to lure the disturber away.

The ducklings are hatched all within a few hours of each other. The mother gadwall waits while the ducklings' wet feathers dry. Then she waddles to and from the nest trying to get her children out and off to the feeding place. Here she pokes her bill anxiously at her brood.

Crowding out of their nest, the ducklings are finally ready to set off. Of the ten eggs laid, seven have hatched. Like most ducks, but unlike geese, the father gadwall shows no family feeling. Once mating is over, he goes away and leaves all responsibility to the female.

↑ A historic moment in the newborn ducklings' lives comes when they climb out of the nest and march after their mother in close formation through the reeds. What makes them move is hunger and their mother's quacking insistence that they come along.

The ducklings take to water and, with the pretty picture below, Lorene Squire's little family history ends. The ducklings swim around a clump of sedges. Only a few hours old, they feed themselves by dibbling beaks in water and snatching water bugs.

The southward flight begins in September. But weeks before flight starts, the ducks gather in small flocks, fly from pond to pond in restless trial flights. Here gadwalls and blue-winged teal splash up from the water, settle down nervously again nearby.

The great migration ends in warm southern waters. Swimming on Louisiana lake bordered with water hyacinths the ducks grow fat. Male and female pay no attention to each other until sun grows warm in March and the northward urge grows strong again.

MOVIE OF THE WEEK:

Birth of the Blues

Bing Crosby glorifies old tunes

What you see above will look pretty strange unless you are an American over 25. If you are, you should recognize these elegant examples of the oldtime lantern slides, juicily colored and juicily romantic, that used to flash on 10¢-movie screens while a tenor stood by and rendered sentimental songs. The singer above is Bing Crosby. And these scenes constitute one of the high nostalgic moments from his new movie production.

The serious purpose of Paramount's Birth of the Blues is to show the origins of American jazz in New Orleans. It briefly introduces a Negro band patterned after the historic Razy Dazzy Spasm Band that used to serenade the pleasure palaces of Basin Street. Then it dwells at length on Bing's efforts to organize his own eight-piece outfit, patterned after the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, which was one of the first white bands to play in respectable quarters. Historically, all this is too sketchy to be important. But musically, the picture is tops. It abounds with first-rate singing of such old favorites as Waiting at the Church, Wait 'Till the Sun Shines, Nellie, Cuddle Up a Little Closer, St. James Infirmary, Melancholy Baby, and Crosby's lantern-slide rendition of By the Light of the Silvery Moon (above).

3 "TO MY HONEY I'LL CROON LOVE'S TUNE....."

6 SLIDE IS SHOWN UPSIDE DOWN, AUDIENCE STAMPS AND WHISTLES

9 THIS LEAVES NO DOUBT "SILVER MOON" IS POSITIVELY ENDED

This is not the first time that Paramount's president, Barney Balaban, has regaled his public with lantern-slide songs. In 1913 when Barney Balaban built the little Kedzie Theater in Chicago, first of his nationwide chain, his brother and sister played violin and piano accompaniments to such slides while Barney collected dimes at the door.

As a partner for Bing Crosby, Paramount again recruited Mary Martin, who has never looked prettier nor sung better—she and Crosby are a crack musical team. The instrumental music is expertly looked after by Jack Teagarden's band. The only unmusical individual in Birth of the Blues is 7-year-old Carolyn Lee, whose private and professional life is discussed on the next page.

Clean Teeth aren't enough!

Vray, an entirely new type dentifrice with cleansing power proved by the amazing Electric Eye, cleans not only the teeth but the whole mouth!

DR. WEST'S
BRAND
FOR WHOLE-MOUTH HYGIENE

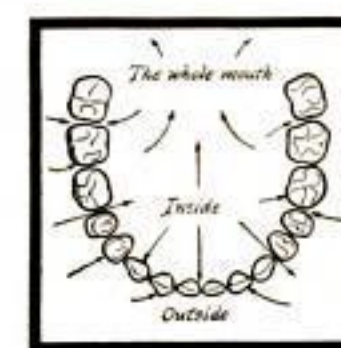

Any good dentifrice will clean teeth. But whole mouth hygiene calls for an entirely new type dentifrice—one that's basically different. Such a dentifrice is Dr. West's Vray, a product of the makers of the Miracle-Tuft Toothbrush.

Not a liquid—paste—or powder! Vray even looks different. It combines three patented ingredients. One with a remarkable faculty for quick penetration between the teeth and into the mouth crevices. The others for their surging, foaming cleansing action.

Whole Mouth is Cleansed. The gentle action of a toothbrush releases Vray's cleansing power. Millions of tiny bubbles surge over, around and between the teeth, tongue and other mouth tissue. This powerful force sweeps food particles before it, loosens and floats away surface stains and discolorations, bathes and sweetens the whole mouth.

For whole mouth hygiene, brighter teeth, a more winning smile... use Vray. Satisfaction or money back!

AMAZING ELECTRIC EYE PROVES VRAY'S TOOTH-CLEANSING POWER: In case after case tested, teeth neglected or ineffectively cleaned have been made startlingly brighter after a single brushing with Vray.

HOW VRAY CLEANS:

Vray's surging, cleansing action cleans the whole mouth. See booklet packed with every bottle for this whole amazing story.

"Birth of the Blues" (continued)

Carolyn Lee marches down the Paramount lot in Hollywood as if she owned the place. This unconscious strut is what first made a talent scout sit up and notice her.

CAROLYN LEE, 7, MARCHES INTO STARDOM

The youngest player to be put under long-term contract to a major studio since Baby Sandy is Carolyn Lee, aged 7, who handles the comedy in Birth of the Blues while everybody else is busy singing. For her entrance Carolyn slides down a banister and up-ends Bing Crosby. From then on she behaves saucily, even crustily, to her elders, and succeeds in being not obnoxious but cute. She is Hollywood's most likely new candidate for female child stardom.

Between films Carolyn lives at home in Martin's Ferry, Ohio. Her career began when she caught the attention of a traveling movie executive who saw her march into a store and ask for gum. He sent Carolyn's photograph to Hollywood. After a screen test, she was given parts in Honeymoon in Bali and Virginia at $10,000 a film.

Recently she met Mayor LaGuardia and apologized for keeping him waiting almost two minutes. "Mr. Mayor, I'm sorry I kept you waiting. My mother took me to the ladies' room and I couldn't get out." For once the Mayor had no appropriate reply and said nothing, while Carolyn continued with topics of the day.

Sunbeam SHAVEMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

HAS THIS EXCLUSIVE SINGLE HEAD!

Preferred by Men Who Have Tried Them All

MAGNIFIED CUT-AWAY SECTION

This 2-thousandths inch thin, screened comb picks up the beard the way it grows. The holes are so close together, and there are so many of them, the whiskers enter freely and easily for swift, smooth shaving.

This Hollow Ground, double-edge cutter speeds over-and-back in lightning fast, half-circle oscillations. It is pressed tight against the inner surface of the comb by centrifugal force—gets the whiskers coming and going for quick, close comfort-shaves.

WE SENT the questionnaire shown on the right to thousands of men who had owned their Shavemasters a year or more. The names were taken at random from our files and represented every city, nook and corner of the United States. As the manufacturer we wanted to know how these men really liked these dry-shavers in comparison to their former method of shaving.

FIRST BY TEST

With all items of shaving performance combined in unbiased tests conducted by Electrical Testing Laboratories, Shavemaster is given highest total score. (Report No. 154659, 10/40)

QUESTIONNAIRE

Have you been using your Shavemaster regularly since you purchased it about a year ago? Yes Yes No No
What are your general thoughts regarding your Shavemaster? How do you like it? Do you like it better than your previous method of shaving, etc.? Definitely Yes! Use it every day. Wouldn't consider going back to former shaving method. Shavemaster is the best electric shaver made today and I've tried them all.

9 out of 10 said they wouldn't go back to their former shaving method for love nor money

THE MEN WHO RECEIVED THIS QUESTIONNAIRE had owned their Shavemasters a year or more. Their answers weren't snap judgments made on the first flush of enthusiasm. They were the kind of carefully considered opinions you can bank on. These men said they wouldn't part with their Shavemasters under any circumstances. They were "all-out" in their praise of its delivered satisfaction.

Every day an INCREASING number of men are buying Shavemaster. When you change the shaving habits of more than a million men you must have something. We say to you that regardless of the shaving method you have used up to now—safety, straight-edge, or electric—you are really missing a good thing until you know the convenience and comfort of the daily use of Shavemaster.

You may have met an individual here or there who has the opinion that electric shaving isn't all it's cracked up to be. For that reason you may have hesitated to buy one for yourself. Bear in mind that this individual may have had one of a dozen ordinary electric shavers and based his opinion on its performance. Remember that there are over a MILLION Shavemaster users who wouldn't give up Shavemaster for love nor money. You can enjoy shaving comfort such as you have never known before with Sunbeam Shavemaster. It is the electric shaver that's winning America through the enthusiasm of men who use it.

COST OF LIVING

DOLLAR PINCHING IS IN STYLE AS WAR TOUCHES AVERAGE FAMILY

The pretty young housewife with the stacks of silver dollars above is not playing a game. She is learning some of the hard facts of war. One big fact for her and other readers of LIFE to ponder is that in wartime any family with a fixed income is poorer. It is true, of course, that farmers and defense workers and some industries are making money in this war, as they did in the last. But the average U. S. family income that has been steady in recent years is now lagging far behind rising U. S. prices. And as far as the history of wartime economics can tell us, it won't begin to catch up until after the war is over.

The $2,500 which this young lady's husband earns is average for a LIFE-reading family. To make her budget problem vivid, LIFE furnished her with silver dollars to pile up on her floor. On the opposite page, the piles on the left-hand side of the picture show how, as the average family in their income group, she and her husband used their $2,500 in 1939. That year they were able to save $165. Now, in 1941, if they insist on maintaining their 1939 standard of living they must put more dollars in each of the piles marked food, clothing, rent, furnishings, etc. As shown in the right half of the picture, this wipes out the savings pile completely and cuts into the "miscellaneous" pile. The prudent alternative is to cut down on expenses all along the line.

In the war world of 1941 and the years ahead, neither price control nor salary rises are going to make ends meet for the average U. S. family. The blunt truth is that Americans cannot buy the defeat of Hitler and still afford all the material things they have been accustomed to having.

They will have to do without, and they might as well have some fun doing it. Once more, it will be smart to be thrifty. Patches will be patriotic. If any LIFE reader thinks this is a sad prospect, let him look abroad for a moment at the millions of European families who do not have to pinch pennies any more because everything they had has been taken away from them.

THESE PRICES GIVE RISE IN AVERAGE COST OF IMPORTANT FOODS IN SEPTEMBER 1941 COMPARED TO SEPTEMBER 1939. THE FIGURES ARE FROM THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: FOOD PRICES ARE UP AND THE END IS NOT IN SIGHT

In one of her newspaper columns the other day Eleanor Roosevelt wrote: "I had some quite appalling news on the rise in the cost of living last week. The average housewife must now spend 14% more money for the food she will need for the family dinner than she did a year ago. In some cities the increase . . . is even greater. . . ." Mrs. Roosevelt's discovery was no news at all to most U. S. housewives. Food prices were low in 1940, have risen sharply and are now 5% higher than even in the boom year of 1937.

In the general upsurge of food prices, everybody but the consumer is having a fine time. Farmers are gloating over the highest farm prices since 1929. Food processors, jobbers and wholesalers all have added their few pennies to the bill. Retailers are generally the last to up prices, as they have to face the individual buyer, but they have gone along too. Even though there is no present scarcity, the only important food items that have escaped a rise since 1939 are rolled oats, corn meal, oranges, potatoes, canned peas. If the farmer-loving Congressmen writing the price-control bill have their way, this kind of price rise may go on for a long time.

MOST EVERYTHING TO WEAR IS HIGHER TOO

Next to food and shelter, clothing is the most important individual item in any family budget. Rises in clothing prices are sometimes pretty well hidden by a lowering of standard of quality—the buyer pays the same price but gets less for his money. The prices of the girl's costume above are taken from averages compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington and represent the same quality in both years. The stockings, for instance, are four-thread, 42-gauge, all-silk, with composite evenness of 85% to 87%.

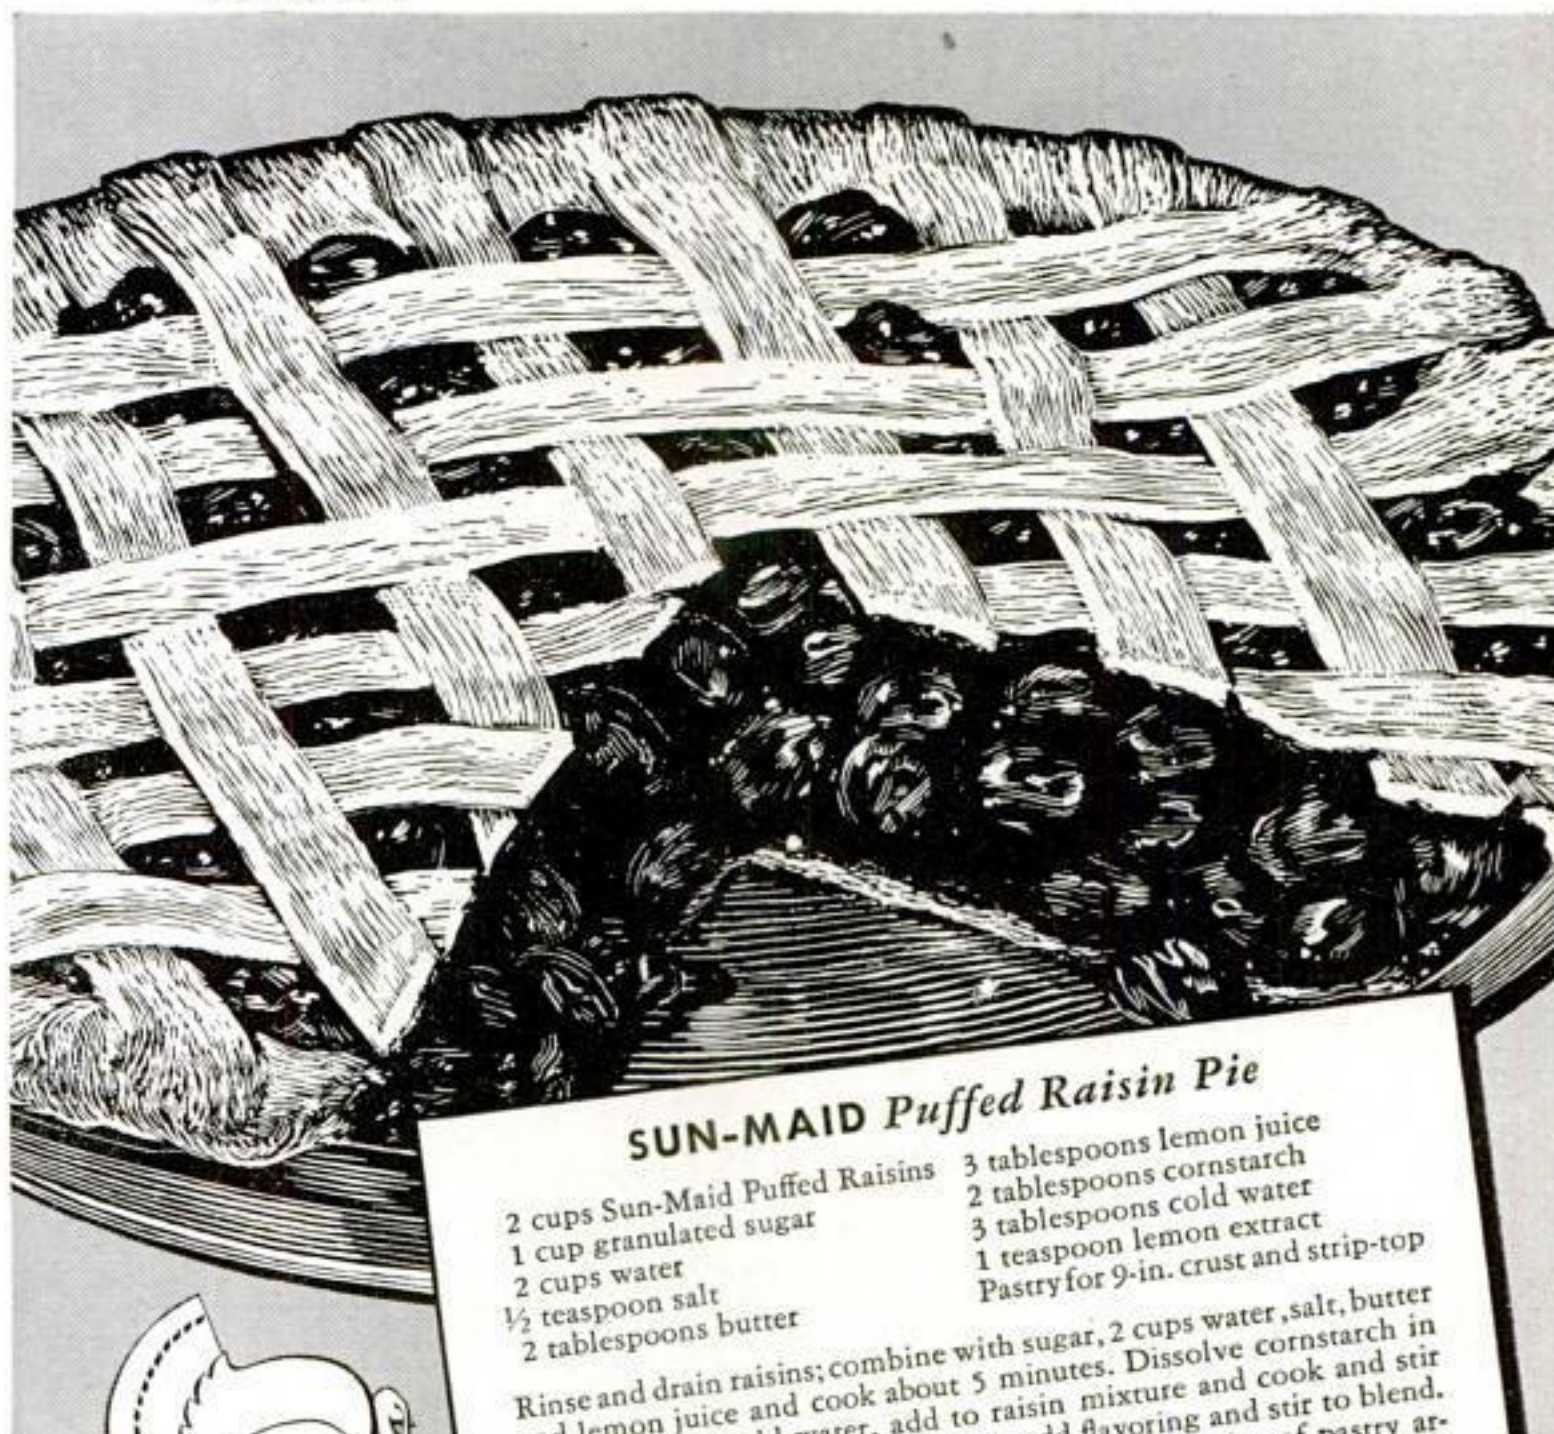

Men's clothes have risen as much or more than women's, according to the Bureau's figures. Overcoats are up from $29.77 to $32.10, wool suits from $27.18 to $30.65. But the Bureau reports that men can still buy a good "business shirt" for a dollar and a half.

THE DRUGGIST, THE DOCTOR, AND THE GAS

Owning and running an automobile is one of the expensive things the average U. S. family does. As yet most families appear more willing to skimp on savings than cars. But before the war is over this pleasure may become such a luxury that many families will give it up.

The total cost-of-living rise in the U. S. in two years—8.8%—is small beside Great Britain's: 26%. But it is almost as large as Canada's and Canada has been at war two years. It is larger than Germany's, where there has been a two-year rise of not quite 5%.

One of the fundamental economic laws is that when there is more money in circulation and fewer things to buy, prices go up. In the U. S. today there is twice as much money to spend than in the boom years of 1928 and 1929 (ten billions, as compared with five in 1929). And with U. S. materials and labor being turned to the production of war goods, there will be fewer products to buy. To try to help U. S. consumers meet this gathering spiral of inflation, "Price Boss" Leon Henderson has nothing but his good jawbone. He has no real power to force manufacturers, farmers and sellers to accept a set price for their goods. Until someone has such power, prices will continue to go up.

TEXAS FOOTBALL

A GREAT UNIVERSITY HAS NATION'S TOP TEAM

In fertile central Texas, half a mile north of the State capitol at Austin, the biggest, richest university in the South sprawls impressively over a 40-acre campus first set aside for it in the days of the Texas Republic. The University of Texas owes much to the dream of its pioneer-founders, and much to the geological conformations underlying the Texas land. In 1923, an even 40 years after its founding, it was still largely a forlorn community of shacks, struggling none too successfully to achieve either the academic prestige or the physical splendor which its founders foresaw.

But the University of Texas owned 2,000,000 acres of semidesert land in West Texas, deeded to it by a land-poor legislature at its founding. In 1923 black oil came up out of that land in a torrent. Three exciting chapters in the making of a great U. S. university began to be written, in somewhat unorthodox order. First Texas built a magnificent academic plant. Then it began to climb to scholastic eminence. Last of all it produced a great football team.

The University's endowment of over $43,000,000 is sixth highest in the country. Under the terms of the original deed, the University can use most of this great wealth only for permanent improvements (not salaries or current expenses, which must be paid by the legislature). In 15 years Texas has acquired more than $15,000,000 worth of splendid new buildings. Most ambitious is the $3,000,000 Mirabeau B. Lamar Library, 32 stories high, with a capacity of 2,000,000 volumes, housing a world-famous collection of Browning, a page from the Gutenberg Bible, a first folio of Shakespeare, and original manuscripts of Byron and Tennyson. Since 1939, Texas has had a distinguished U. S. educator, Texas-born Dr. Homer Price Rainey, onetime head of the American Youth Commission, onetime professional baseball player, as its president. Enrollment has reached a peak of 11,000.

But until Texas hired its first big-time football coach, Nebraska's famous Dana X. Bible, in 1937, and slowly put together a first-rate football team to match its first-rate educational assets, it could scarcely compete with other State universities, or even with colleges of lesser rank in its own State, for nationwide publicity and resulting popular recognition. When Bible came to Texas, he asked five years in which to mold a championship team. This year the Bible five-year plan unfolded to reveal, precisely on schedule, a team that in rapid succession has defeated Colorado, Louisiana State, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Rice, Southern Methodist, and tied Baylor. This year, the University of Texas had definitely arrived.

Texas is such a big State that it has a major college football league—the Southwest Conference—practically all to itself. It includes Texas A. & M., Texas Christian, Baylor, Rice, Southern Methodist, Texas and (only outsider) Arkansas. In intersectional games the Southwest Conference has recently looked better and better each year. Main reason is the highly organized Texas interscholastic football program, covering the length and breadth of the State, in which 4,490 schools compete in 861 graduated leagues. University of Texas sponsors this program but enjoys no monopoly on the State's high-school stars. Nearly all players on Texas teams in the Conference are Texas-bred. University of Texas has two "foreigners" this season, one from a few miles over the Oklahoma border, one from Alabama. Texans are mightily proud of this year's Texas team. Below are spectators at a recent Texas game. On the opposite page are members of two honorary Texas University service organizations, the "Cowboys" and the "Orange Jackets," holding a victory celebration on the campus with the floodlighted tower of Lamar Library in the background.

He wears his usual practice uniform: football shoes and pants, sweatshirt, and Texas baseball cap in his right hand.

Bible wields seemingly effortless but iron-clad discipline over his team, seldom relaxes his dignity on or off the field.

In "lecture room" in Memorial Stadium field house, Bible precedes practice workout with talk on plays and strategy.

At blackboard on practice field, Bible points out mistakes to a squad member. He hates sloppy play, even if successful.

On the bench Bible watches game. He wears the same suit to games till team loses, smokes cigars, rarely betrays emotion.

DANA BIBLE, THE TEXAS COACH, IS LEADING CITIZEN

When Dana X. Bible came to Texas from the University of Nebraska, many Texans swallowed hard at his contract: $15,000 a year for ten years. That was almost twice as much as the U. of Texas was then paying its president (now, however, President Rainey gets $17,500), and nearly three times its top salary for a professor. In 1937 and 1938 Bible's Texas teams finished last in the Southwest Conference. The 1939 team climbed to fourth place and last year's team to third, beating Texas A. & M. in the season's most stunning upset.

Bible is 50. He made his first great coaching record at A. & M., winning five Conference titles in eleven years. In eight following years (1929-36) he turned out six Big Six Conference champions at Nebraska.

As a coach, Bible is a perfectionist. He would rather have his squad perform 20 straight plays perfectly than 200 razzle-dazzlers sloppily. Bible's teams generally have played more conservative football than others in the Southwest Conference. If Bible can be said to favor one football fundamental over another, it is speed. In five years at Texas, as the "Bible Plan" has built a No. 1 team, many Texans have come to consider Dana X. Bible the No. 1 citizen of the State.

Bible takes Sundays off to relax with family at swank, air-conditioned Austin home. Children are Barbara and Bill.

Bible demonstrates spinner play at big luncheon of Monday Morning Quarterback Club. This is major weekly civic event for which several hundred citizens of Austin usually show up. He shows movies, delivers critiques, explains plays.

1940's football captain, Jimmy Grubbs, now in the Air Corps. Crain, a great triple-threat back, and brilliant field general of Bible's starting team, is a leading All-America choice.

Just before game squad runs through calisthenics drill directed by senior players at end of field. Organized drill is typical of Bible system, unlike haphazard warm-up of most teams.

Captain Pete Layden, high scorer of Conference, has injured arm rubbed by Trainer Kelley. Texas All-America candidates are Layden, Crain, Right End Kutner and Right Guard Daniel.

Most Texas players are preparing for careers as physical-education instructors or coaches. In a morning nutrition class (above) they study an important subject required for degree.

Only Fine Arts student on the Texas squad is Joe Schwarting, 6-ft., 21-year-old, 185-lb. end from Waco, Texas. Quarter of team are in business, pre-professional or liberal arts courses.

Nine married men are on 38-man squad at Texas. Here are seven of them with their wives. Average age of husbands is 20 years. Married players live off campus in Austin. Two team-wives live away from husbands during the school year. On opposite page is newest of team's two babies, Peggy Jane Freeman, who lives with her mother and mother's family in Dallas.

Unmarried players live in Hill Hall, big dormitory for varsity athletes. Here Harold ("Buddy") Jungmichel, 200-lb. left guard from Port Arthur, and Donald ("Bo") Cohenour, 225-

lb. left tackle from Orange, play rummy morning before game. Stars and subs alike get $50-a-month work-scholarships to pay board and room. Boots are in most students' wardrobes.

DOROTHY McGUIRE

ACTRESS FITS HER PART SO WELL IT IS HARD TO

TELL WHERE McGUIRE ENDS AND "CLAUDIA" BEGINS

by GEOFFREY T. HELLMAN

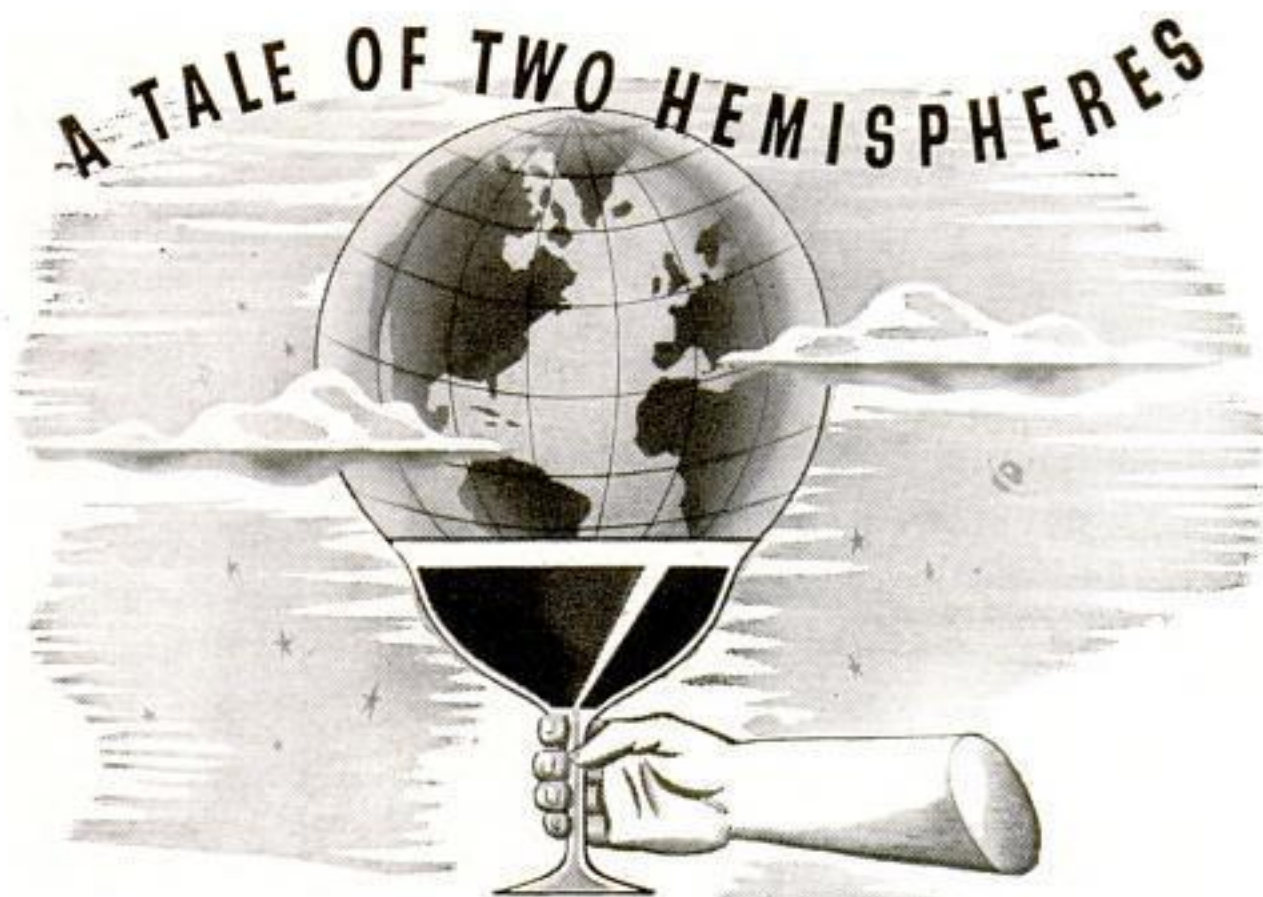

Next to the war, the topic which most Americans regard with a maximum of interest is probably that of married life. This explains in part the phenomenon of Claudia—an affectionate, scatterbrained child-wife, conceived by Rose Franken three years ago in the pages of Redbook magazine, who is now rapidly becoming a national and even international character. The first Claudia story in Redbook was so enthusiastically received that Miss Franken, who had no idea what she was getting into, wrote another, and then another. Soon she found herself the author of one of the most popular serials in the country. A playwright with one hit—Another Language—to her credit, she produced another by writing a stage version of Claudia. This opened in New York last winter and is now in its tenth successful month. A second Claudia opened two months ago in Chicago and is selling to capacity every night. A Number Three Claudia company, to tour the country in one-week stands, opens Nov.

14 in upper New York. A Number Four Claudia company for one-night stands is being seriously considered. A Negro Claudia company is being discussed by Miss Franken and John Golden, the play's producer; Miss Franken has already begun tentative casting for this. A radio version of Claudia, sponsored by Grape-Nuts, was a tremendous success last summer, but Miss Franken is now too busy to write it. A television Claudia and a comic-strip Claudia are under consideration. A Hollywood Claudia is a sure bet for 1942, movie rights to the play having been sold to David Selznick for $187,500. Claudia stories are still running strong in Redbook. Two Claudia novels—Claudia and Claudia and David—have been published; a few weeks ago Farrar & Rinehart issued both of these in one volume, entitled, with Biblical simplicity, The Book of Claudia. The only reason there isn't a Claudia Skirt in department stores all over the country is that Miss Franken vetoed this as undignified.

In addition to her domestic fame, Claudia is manifesting signs of universality. She has snowballed onto the stages of Sweden and South America, and only the war has prevented her foreign vogue from spreading further. Miss Franken, for example, has refused to sell Italian and German rights to the play, for both of which she has received offers. If the war were to stop tomorrow, Claudia would probably double her momentum abroad. As a character of cosmic appeal, students of trends are beginning to compare her with Penrod and Mickey Mouse.

All this is giving an unexpectedly sociological importance to Miss Dorothy Hackett McGuire, the 24-year-old Nebraska actress who takes the part of Claudia in the New York production. It is hard to state precisely whether Claudia made McGuire or whether McGuire made Claudia, but it is a fact that whereas several of the critics, voicing a minority opinion, found the play unduly coy and mushy, none of them had anything but praise for the natural charm and skill which Dorothy brought to the title role. It is also a fact that Claudia's major expansion from a small girl into a medium-sized industry has taken place Since McGuire. In any case, Miss McGuire will go down in dramatic history as the first Claudia, a distinction likely to increase as other Claudias pile up.

The importance of being Claudia rests lightly on Dorothy, a tall, extremely pretty, rather poetic-looking girl whom the consciousness of being the prototype of a national figure has left notably modest and unspoiled. When, as happens increasingly, Manhattan theatergoers stop her on the street with the question, "Aren't you Claudia?", she says yes in a shy, pleased way, and hurries on. Although she appreciates the implied compliment to her complete identification of herself to the role, she does not like to be compared to the stage Claudia in private life. Dorothy has nothing against the Broadway Claudia; she just doesn't like to be typed. Actually, she is a good deal like Claudia. For example, Claudia cannot balance a checkbook and does not understand why her husband bothers to pay an income tax. Dorothy, who refers to her checking account at the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. as though it were a new and baffling toy, cannot balance a checkbook, and a couple of years ago, while on tour, she forgot all about making out and paying her income tax and was severely fined by the Treasury Department, which makes no allowance for Claudias. Again, Claudia is an excellent mimic who loves to imitate conversations she overhears on her telephone's party wire; Dorothy, in private life, gives excellent imitations of Katharine Hepburn, whom she somewhat resembles, and used to pretend to be deaf and dumb at parties, putting on an act that generally ended in delighted laughter on her part. Claudia is talkative in a disconnected way; so is Dorothy, whose conversation often runs from antique furniture to politics to abstract forms of dramatic art without any appreciable sequence of thought. The conception of Claudia is that of a naturally attractive girl who does not use make-up. One of the reasons Rose Franken cast Dorothy for the part is that she wore no rouge, had unpainted fingernails. Claudia has a ravenous, schoolgirl appetite, and consumes enormous quantities of bread and jam; so has Dorothy, whose gastronomical excesses, following short-lived fads, run to egg-salad sandwiches and Coca-Cola one week, raw carrots and tomatoes the next.

The saga of Dorothy and Claudia offers a more serious parallel. In the play, Claudia's wide-eyed playfulness gets a severe jolt when she learns that her mother, whom she worships, will die of an incurable disease; Dorothy has had in her own life a tragedy equally bitter and unexpected. When she was 14, her parents were divorced and her

"Uh! Huh! That's what Dad called me, up until a few months ago."
 "Hm! Pretty good-looking skeleton, Anne. But what's the horror story?"
 "Ah! You should have known me, Bobby. I was scrawny and bony, and my nerves were . . . Ugh!"

"Before very long—the girl I see before me now! But what's this about tomato juice?"

"That's the new way to take yeast. Look! Mash a cake of FLEISCHMANN'S in a dry glass with a fork, add a little tomato juice, stir till blended, fill up the glass, and drink. Delicious!"

Fleischmann's Fresh Yeast For Natural Vitamin B Complex

"Were what, for goodness sake?"

"Bristly as thorns—like this! And then I was told I had a Vitamin B Complex deficiency."

"Jiminy crickets, what's that?"

"A shortage of those amazing vitamins you find in their natural form in fresh yeast. So I took two cakes of FLEISCHMANN'S a day in nice cool tomato juice, and before very long . . ."

Read the label. FLEISCHMANN'S is the only yeast with all these vitamins. And the only sources of the important Vitamin B Complex are natural sources, such as yeast and raw liver. Remember, if you bake at home, that three of the vitamins in FLEISCHMANN'S, B<sub>1</sub>, D, and G, are not appreciably lost in the oven; they go right into the bread.

mother remarried. A year later, Dorothy, who was living with her father, whom she adored, came home from school one afternoon and found him lying dead. Although she rarely mentions this experience, childhood friends feel it may have been contributed to the poignancy with which she invests the stage Claudia.

Why Dorothy is not entirely like Claudia

For all these points of similarity, the character Claudia is in many ways a libel on Dorothy McGuire. Dorothy is not married, but if she were, it is doubtful whether she would, like Claudia, permit a complete stranger to kiss her and then be surprised because her husband did not give her a great big hug after listening to her proud report of these goings-on. Nor is it likely that she would, like Claudia, sell her husband's house to a casual luncheon guest in his absence and expect him to be delighted with this unsolicited coup. It is impossible to think of Claudia as having the remotest interest in politics, philosophy or world affairs; Dorothy, on the other hand, discusses these subjects with the enthusiasm of an intellectual sophomore, reads weighty books about them at the drop of a friend's suggestion, believes violently in all-out aid to Britain, and is a frequent attender of Fight for Freedom meetings. Furthermore, Claudia is distinctly a cuddly type, whereas Dorothy, although possessed of a languorous charm that has won her a circle of almost worshipful beaux, has an impersonal, inaccessible quality which tends to preclude intimacy, and has caused her friends to compare her to Garbo. Finally, it is hard to imagine Claudia, a girl almost wholly dependent on her mother and husband, as having the guts, ambition and ability to stand on her own feet which have characterized Dorothy's stage career.

This career, recent in terms of Broadway, actually commenced eleven years ago, when Dorothy, a 13-year-old schoolgirl in Omaha, Neb., appeared in Sir James Barrie's A Kiss For Cinderella in the Omaha Community Playhouse. Dorothy's scrapbook contains the usual letters of congratulations from friends and relatives, but an indication of the unusual nature of her performance appears in an interview which Violet Heming, then appearing as a guest star in a local stock company and no relation whatever to Dorothy, gave to an Omaha newspaper. "The girl is a born actress," said Miss Heming. "She reads lines with natural intuition, not as a child who's been coached. I wouldn't have missed seeing her performance for anything. She is like a breath of spring."

She likes to read in bed. Economical Dorothy borrowed the valances over the bed and pays only $65 a month for a small fifth-floor walk-up. She is inordinately proud of it.

McGUIRE (continued)

Two items about A Kiss for Cinderella stand out in Dorothy's memory. One is that in it she played opposite Henry Fonda, a fellow-Omahan then at the obscure beginning of his professional career. Dorothy realized that she was getting the lion's, or lioness's, share of the audience's attention, and tried to give Fonda as many breaks as possible. Seven or eight years later, when she was still practically unknown, Fonda, stopping briefly in New York, called her up and took her out to dinner and theater. He had never forgotten her 13-year-old consideration for him, he said. This sort of generosity persists in Dorothy, who is too impersonal for the usual theatrical jealousies. For example, when Phyllis Thaxter, now the Chicago Claudia, was trying out for this role, Dorothy cheerfully allowed her to take her part in a Broadway performance of Claudia—even though according to the Golden-McGuire contract she would not have had to do this.

Her feet dismay her

The second aspect of A Kiss for Cinderella which Dorothy recollects centers about her feet. These are surprisingly large, and Dorothy recalls her unrealistic sense of outrage when a pair of rather roomy slippers were brought out for her to put on. The dimensions of her lower extremities are still a source of wonder and dismay to her, and only the other day she was noticeably vexed when a young man with size 9½ feet, trading on a long friendship, kicked off his shoes in her living room and easily and ostentatiously slipped into a pair of pumps she had left under a chair. As a general thing, however, Dorothy is far from vain. Even the size of her feet has not induced her to wear high heels, which would tend to minimize this; low-heeled shoes are more comfortable, and for this reason she usually wears them. For similar reasons, her favorite costume is a skirt and sweater, the latter habitually several sizes too large for her. She loves elaborate little hats, done up with flowers and veils, but this is almost an esthetic rather than a sartorial passion, since these objects do not go with the rest of her get-up, and she often buys them simply to look at them. "You must come up and see my new hat," she frequently says to friends, crinkling up her eyes ecstatically, "because I can't ever wear it." Dorothy is not strong on utilitarianism. After the success of Claudia, she decorated a small apartment with Victorian odds and ends purchased at secondhand shops, and invited her friends to a housewarming. "You mustn't sit on the furniture; it's too precious," she said, and everyone sat on the floor until, her point made, she said, "Now you can sit on the chairs."

HOW TO MAKE YOUR NEXT PAY CHECK GO FARTHER

The story of a remarkable plan and how you can use it to stretch your dollars

DO your expenses seem to get bigger month by month? Do you wish you could find some way to make the old pay check go farther?

That problem puzzles a lot of folks these days. We don't pretend to know any easy way out, either. But there's one thing every family can do. You can plan the best way to spend each pay check—before you spend it.

Not long ago we made an important discovery. All of us know that some families stay out of money troubles through ups and downs. Yet they deny that they "budget." How do they do it? We decided to find out. The answer is simple. They do plan, if only in their minds, to do three things with each pay check.

1. Get ready to meet large occasional expenses—such as taxes and insurance.
2. Pay debts from the past—instalment payments, for instance.
3. Live on what is left.

When you have no spending plan, there's always a risk that one of these, Future, Past or Present Spending will crowd out the others. A plan helps you to keep your spending in balance. You get more of the things you want because you plan their purchase before your money is spent. You are able to pay for the things you must have because your plan keeps you from spending too much on the non-essentials.

How to look ahead

Take the first item, the Future, for example. Suppose that you have a large bill coming due in the next few months. Count the number of pay days between now and then. Figure out how much you should set aside each pay day in order to have the money when you need it. That way you can meet large expenses without worrying.

Budgeting is nothing but a common sense way of planning how you're going to spend your money while you still have it—a way to control your spending to get plenty of fun out of life while making both ends meet.

Would you like to receive a little book which will help you plan your spending? The Budget Calendar makes budgeting easy and simple. No tiresome bookkeeping is required. There are "plan for spending" sheets for every pay day in the year.

Household Finance has published the Budget Calendar as a contribution to better family money management. You are invited to ask for a copy without obligation. There will be no solicitation or follow-up.

How home money management aids national defense

Defense of the nation begins with defense of the home. Home defense means learning how to stretch every dollar till it covers taxes, contributions to charity, defense stamps and bonds, and all the things a family needs for mental and physical health. That's a big job.

We hope that this message will encourage and help folks to keep their money affairs on a sound basis—and that it will contribute to a more effective defense effort.

Dorothy breakfasts on tea and rolls, admits she loves to eat. She furnished her apartment with such Victorian items as this sofa. Dorothy bought it a new cover.

This sort of whimsical quaintness, which is without affectation, has inspired McGuire intimates to devise such nicknames for her as "McGoo" and "Frou."

Dorothy's love of domestic furbelows is the result of a rather unhomey youth. She was born a Catholic, and after her father's death her mother sent her to a convent school in Indianapolis, where she received an average of 91½ in her courses. The Indianapolis Star, cudgeling its memory after her rise to fame last winter, reported that "she was a vivacious and effervescent schoolgirl, and had the happy faculty of giving and taking gracefully." Next she went to Pine Manor Junior College in Wellesley, Mass., where she took a leading part in undergraduate theatricals. She graduated in 1937, and that summer came to New York, where she shared an apartment with a slightly older Omaha girl. She soon fell into the theatrical neophyte's timeworn routine of cooling her heels in producers' anterooms. Her father, a successful lawyer, had left her enough money to live on modestly, and although she had plenty of disappointments in the next two or three years, she was never in want.

"Don't scream it"

Jed Harris, the producer, was responsible for an early McGuire disappointment. Somehow Dorothy got in to see him, and he asked her what experience she had had. "I directed and acted in plays at Pine Manor Junior College," she said, with the confidence of a girl who had never heard of Jed Harris until the day before. "What plays?" asked Harris, with the indifference of a man who had never heard of Pine Manor Junior College. "Well, we did a pirate play," Dorothy replied. "Oh," said Harris. He gave her a part to read, listened irritably for a few moments, said, "Don't scream it," and the interview was over.

It was, nevertheless, Harris who, in 1938, gave Dorothy her first real job when he engaged her to replace Martha Scott, then Hollywood-bound, in Thornton Wilder's Our Town. This gentle play about death was in its seventh month, and the critics, having reviewed it when it opened, paid little attention to Dorothy. Three months in New York and three on tour in this production were followed in the McGuire chronology by a part in My Dear Children, a play made famous by the antics of its star, John Barrymore. Mr. Barrymore was a great disappointment to Dorothy. She toured with him for eight months, and was particularly embarrassed on the occasion of a one-night stand in Omaha, where his elastic vocabulary and uninhibited stage manner made a shocking impression on old family friends of hers in the audience. By the fall of 1939 she found the Great Profile's shenanigans so taxing that she abandoned his troupe in Chicago, thus missing the New York opening. "I'd come blissful and starry-eyed from Our Town into this roughhouse," she said later. "I really and truly was shocked."

During the next year, Dorothy got practically nowhere. After two or three minor engagements on Broadway and a summer season in Maine, she accepted the position of understudy to Julie Haydon in the Theatre Guild's touring company of William Saroyan's Time of Your Life. She took this job as a stopgap while negotiating with the Guild for a part she really coveted in Philip Barry's Liberty Jones, and left it last fall, when the Guild finally decided not to use her in the Barry play. Their decision, like the personality of Mr. Barrymore, was a major disappointment to Dorothy. She returned to New York and developed a severe case of the blues and a feeling that she was surrounded by swindlers.

Enter potential Claudia #210

In this despondent and truculent mood, Dorothy turned up at the John Golden office for an interview with Rose Franken, the director as well as the author of Claudia. The latter, who had reputedly interviewed 209 potential Claudias, many of them in mink and heavy make-up, had developed a violent allergy to glamor girls, but when Dorothy walked in, wearing an old beaver coat, oversize sweater and tweed skirt, Miss Franken sat up and took notice. "She marched around me, looking at me as though I were a thing!" Dorothy reported later. Miss Franken made Dorothy read the entire play out loud, and called in Mr. Golden, who asked her to read most of it over again. By this time it was 5:30 in the afternoon and Dorothy looked distinctly droopy. She was still brooding about the Barry play, and her air was so sulky that Miss Franken felt impelled to ask, "Don't you like my play?" Dorothy nodded disinterestedly. "The child is tired," said Miss Franken to Mr. Golden, and sent her home with a script.

Women are emotional creatures, as all thoughtful observers of human nature know, and for an actress to do her best in a play she must be in love with it. When Dorothy tried out for Claudia, she was

ACTORS' FACES are EXTRA sensitive to Shaving Cream

—that's why—

VICTOR MOORE uses WILLIAMS

YOU wouldn't enjoy wearing heavy stage make-up every day. And you'd like it less when you removed the make-up. For you would probably have to rub it off with heavy towels. You might even have to use benzene, acetone or other strong chemicals. That's why actors' faces are sensitive to irritants in shaving cream.

To be gentle to your skin, a shaving cream must be made of fine, quality ingredients, combined as carefully as a prescription. Such a cream is Williams, compounded with the skill of over 100 years.

Snow-white, bland and mild, Williams lets you shave closely with comfort. Try it!

Senator Oliver P. Loganberry is the role portrayed by Victor Moore in the above scene from "Louisiana Purchase." At left, Mr. Moore in his dressing room. He says: "Taking off make-up is hard on my skin. I can't risk further irritation from shaving cream. I always get Williams—it's gentle as a spring breeze!"

McGUIRE (continued)

still in love with Liberty Jones. Rose Franken, who saw in her 210th candidate a natural Claudia, perceived this fact, and proceeded, on behalf of her play, to woo Dorothy. She took Dorothy to her Connecticut farm for the weekend, introduced her to her three sons with "This is Claudia," made her swallow huge draughts of milk, and called in the cook to listen as she read her part. The cook pronounced her O.K. Dorothy was softened but not entirely won over. A week later, three or four days after Claudia had gone into rehearsal with herself in the title role but without a contract, John Golden, dissatisfied with her acting, intimated that she might be fired. Dorothy burst into tears. Miss Franken interceded, advising her not to take this threat too seriously. "I'm not crying about Claudia," Dorothy hiccuped. "I'm crying about Liberty Jones."

Dorothy falls in love with "Claudia"

Shortly after this outburst, Dorothy transferred her unrequited passion for Liberty Jones to a love affair with her new vehicle, and Mr. Golden, aware of this happy change, bestowed upon her love's reward in the shape of a straight Equity contract, terminable on two weeks' notice. During the Washington tryout, Dorothy's acting was so superb that he superseded this with a run-of-the-play contract—a step which proved to be a wise one after opening night in New York, when the applause was such that Dorothy was pushed out for a solo curtain call, the first in her life. "It was divine," she told friends later.

Dorothy's friends constitute a refreshing index to her simplicity and complete absence of worldliness. Except for Frances Starr, the seasoned and expert actress who plays the mother in Claudia and who has encouraged and admired Dorothy from the very first day of rehearsal, not one of them is well known. Most of them come from Omaha, and are making their living in New York as journalists, actors and radio singers. Dorothy's best beau is a Connecticut boy who is a cutter for Museum of Modern Art movies. She has bought a car with him, and the two often drive to the country Sundays, starting out at 6 in the morning to avoid heavy traffic, and take long walks. Dorothy enjoys the company of men, especially men whom she considers brainy, but there is nothing flirtatious about her. She has an odd detachment from life that makes her both surprised and a little frightened when, as often happens, a man falls in love with her. Under these circumstances, the man generally comes to look on her as a particularly enchanting sister.

Dorothy's simplicity is also reflected in her apartment, a modest walk-up where Bertha, a Negro maid formerly with her mother in Omaha, keeps house for her. Dorothy loves music, and the twin prides of her small living room are a yellow-keyed melodeon for which she paid $35 and an elderly wooden washstand in which she keeps an elderly phonograph. She loves to put on records and dance around the room, all by herself. She hates dancing in night clubs. She is an amateur painter, with a good sense of color. She likes giving tiny cocktail parties, and on these occasions calls guests' attention to her caginess in buying two screens which stand near the two windows in her living room in the daytime and which she places on the sills at night. "Instead of Venetian blinds," she explains, looking terribly shrewd. "The windows are a special size and if you move, the blinds would be no good for the next place." She attaches great importance to her possessions, and feels insulted if anyone fails to appreciate them.

The past year has probably been the happiest in Dorothy's life, since it has seen her well on her way toward fulfilling her greatest ambition: to become a top-rank actress. She is a moderately superstitious girl, and the consistency of this ambition may be judged by the fact that for the past ten years, whenever she saw a white horse, went under a bridge over which a train was passing, or just happened to feel in the mood, she made a wish, "I want to be a hit in a hit." Claudia has dated this particular wish, and she now has a more complicated one, which she says cannot be divulged because exposure would invalidate it. "It's a five-year plan, having to do with the theater but also involving the personal life," she states, guardedly. Not even her best friends know whether this plan involves marriage or not.

The Selznick people have given Dorothy a screen test for the film version of Claudia, and are holding her under an option. Broadway gossip says she will get the part as soon as the play closes, when the movie rights go into effect. It may be that her current wish is partly concerned with this, but it is hard to conceive of her enjoying the highly publicized side of life in Hollywood. If she goes, she will probably rent a small apartment, install her phonograph and melodeon, and start looking around for friends from Omaha, Neb.

Most of the way the railway across the Sahara Desert will run over hard ground, avoiding an occasional great shifting sand dune. Maintenance cabins will be erected every ten miles, stations and switches every 30 miles. Coal from Kenadsa mines nearby will power steam locomotives at least as far as Beni Abbès (see map on p. 134). Diesel electric engines will eventually take it from there.

SAHARA RAILWAY

HITLER PUSHES RAIL ROUTE ACROSS
DESERT TOWARD DAKAR PLANE BASE

A useful detail in any plan Hitler may have to conquer the Americas in 1945 or thereabouts is a railroad the Vichy French Government is now building across the Sahara Desert to connect the Mediterranean with Dakar. This would bring heavy supplies to the Dakar air base from which it is only five hours by air to the hump of Brazil. And from Dakar Nazi submarines and sea raiders might close the South Atlantic to U. S. shipping.

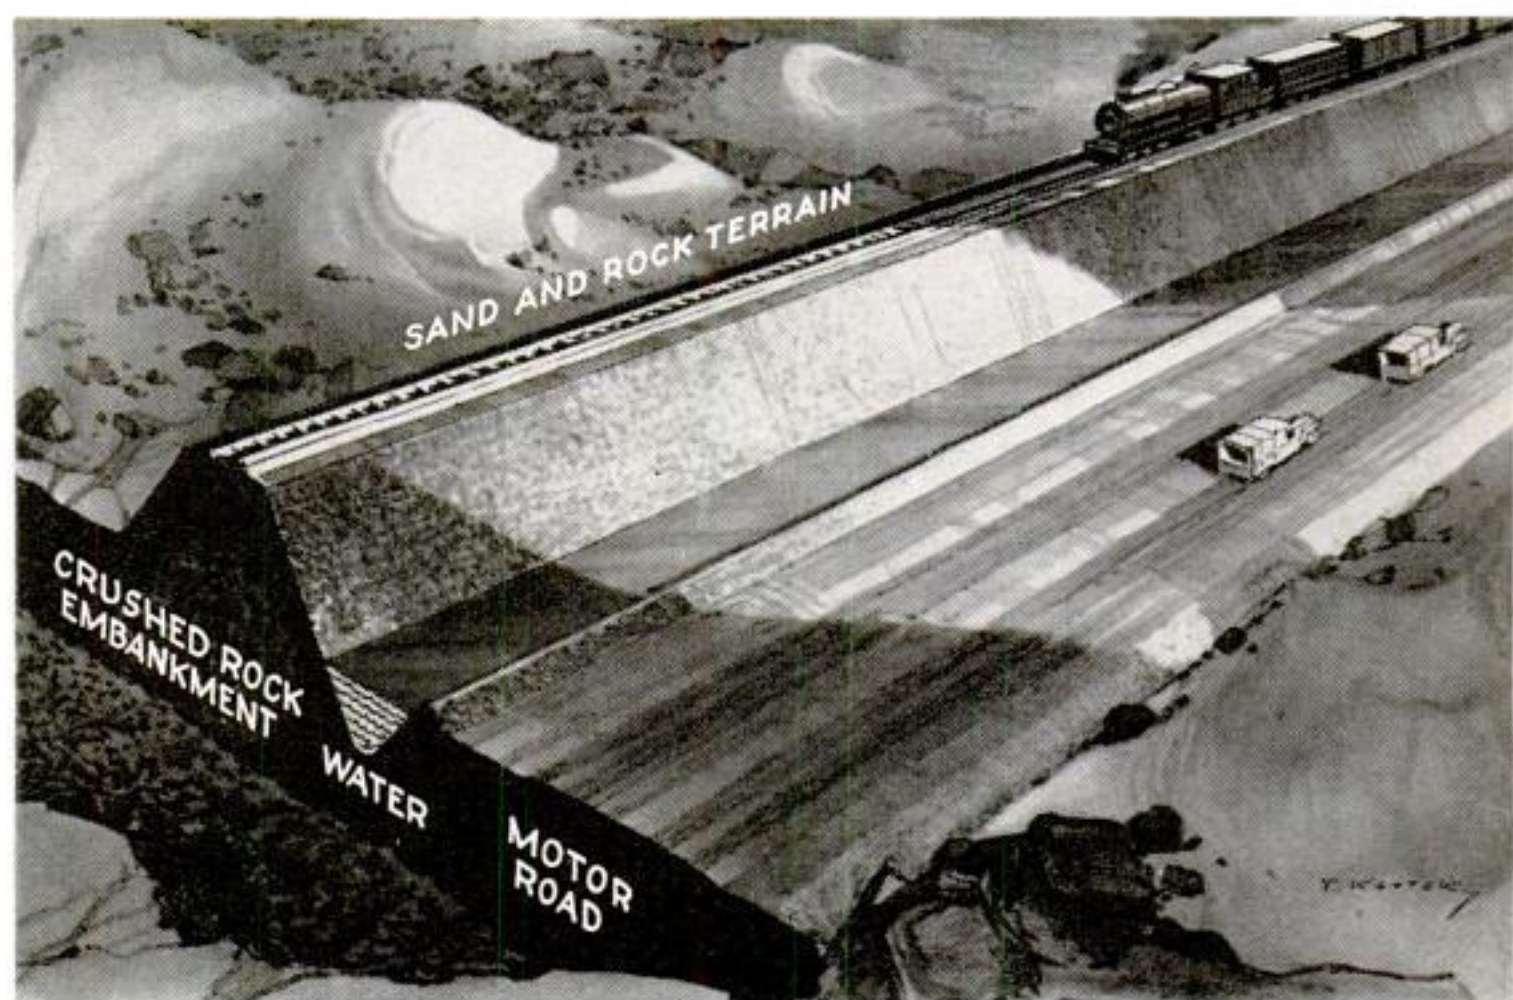

At present the slowly advancing railroad serves as a railhead for raids on the Free French and British in the heart of Africa. After the war it would open to Germany the riches of the Niger River basin and all West Africa, putting Berlin four days from Timbuktu by rail and ship. It would speed the development of the Niger Basin, already begun by France, to stop the southward onrush of the desert sand that has been slowly drowning the green jungles.

This railroad across the desert (see map p. 134), contrary to general opinion, is no great engineering feat. How it is done is shown in the drawings on this page. A French engineer first had the idea in 1879, but desert massacres and French politics smothered the project. A sleeper bus line over the same route has operated since 1930. The route runs largely over hard ground and through the low point in the Atlas mountains. Total cost will be $30,000,000 or about the equivalent of two weeks' indemnity paid by France to Germany.

Across shifting sand at the northern end of the route, the Trans-Saharan railway is raised on trestle to prevent the blowing sand from burying the rails. There are no tunnels and very few bridges.

In mountains, where the rainy season may wash out tracks, railway runs along embankment. Here it is paralleled by a water conduit and by a motor highway with gas station every 50 miles.

It is the reliable messenger, delivering in a flash information that enables the brains of infantry, artillery, tank corps and air force to direct operations with sure control.

NEW YORK CITY AQUARIUM

STAFF CONTINUES SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATIONS

DESPITE CLOSING OF CITY'S FAVORITE MUSEUM

CITY'S NOW-VACATED AQUARIUM

Until it closed its doors on Oct. 1 to make room for the excavation of the Battery-to-Brooklyn vehicular tunnel, one of the world's best museums was the New York Aquarium. Its collection of 12,000 fishes of 450 different species, biggest in the world, annually attracted more visitors than any other institution in the city. But like all good museums the Aquarium was more than a sideshow for the entertainment and edification of tourists and biology classes. It was a gold mine of specimens for fundamental scientific research. Though the closing of the Aquarium brought dispersal of its splendid exhibition collection, the New York Zoological Society has set out to preserve intact its scientific staff and collections until it can find land and funds to build a new aquarium.

Most popular inhabitant of the old Aquarium was the electric eel which, on the opposite page, demonstrates its ability to light up more than 200 neon bulbs with a twitch of its 4-ft. spine. Under the continuing study of Aquarist C. W. Coates, the huge nerve-like electric organs which make up more than half the eel's weight and five-sixths of its length are yielding new facts on the construction and operation of all nerves, including those in human beings. The eel's 500-volt, 200-watt discharges make possible much finer measurements than can be taken on the low potential generated by human nerves.

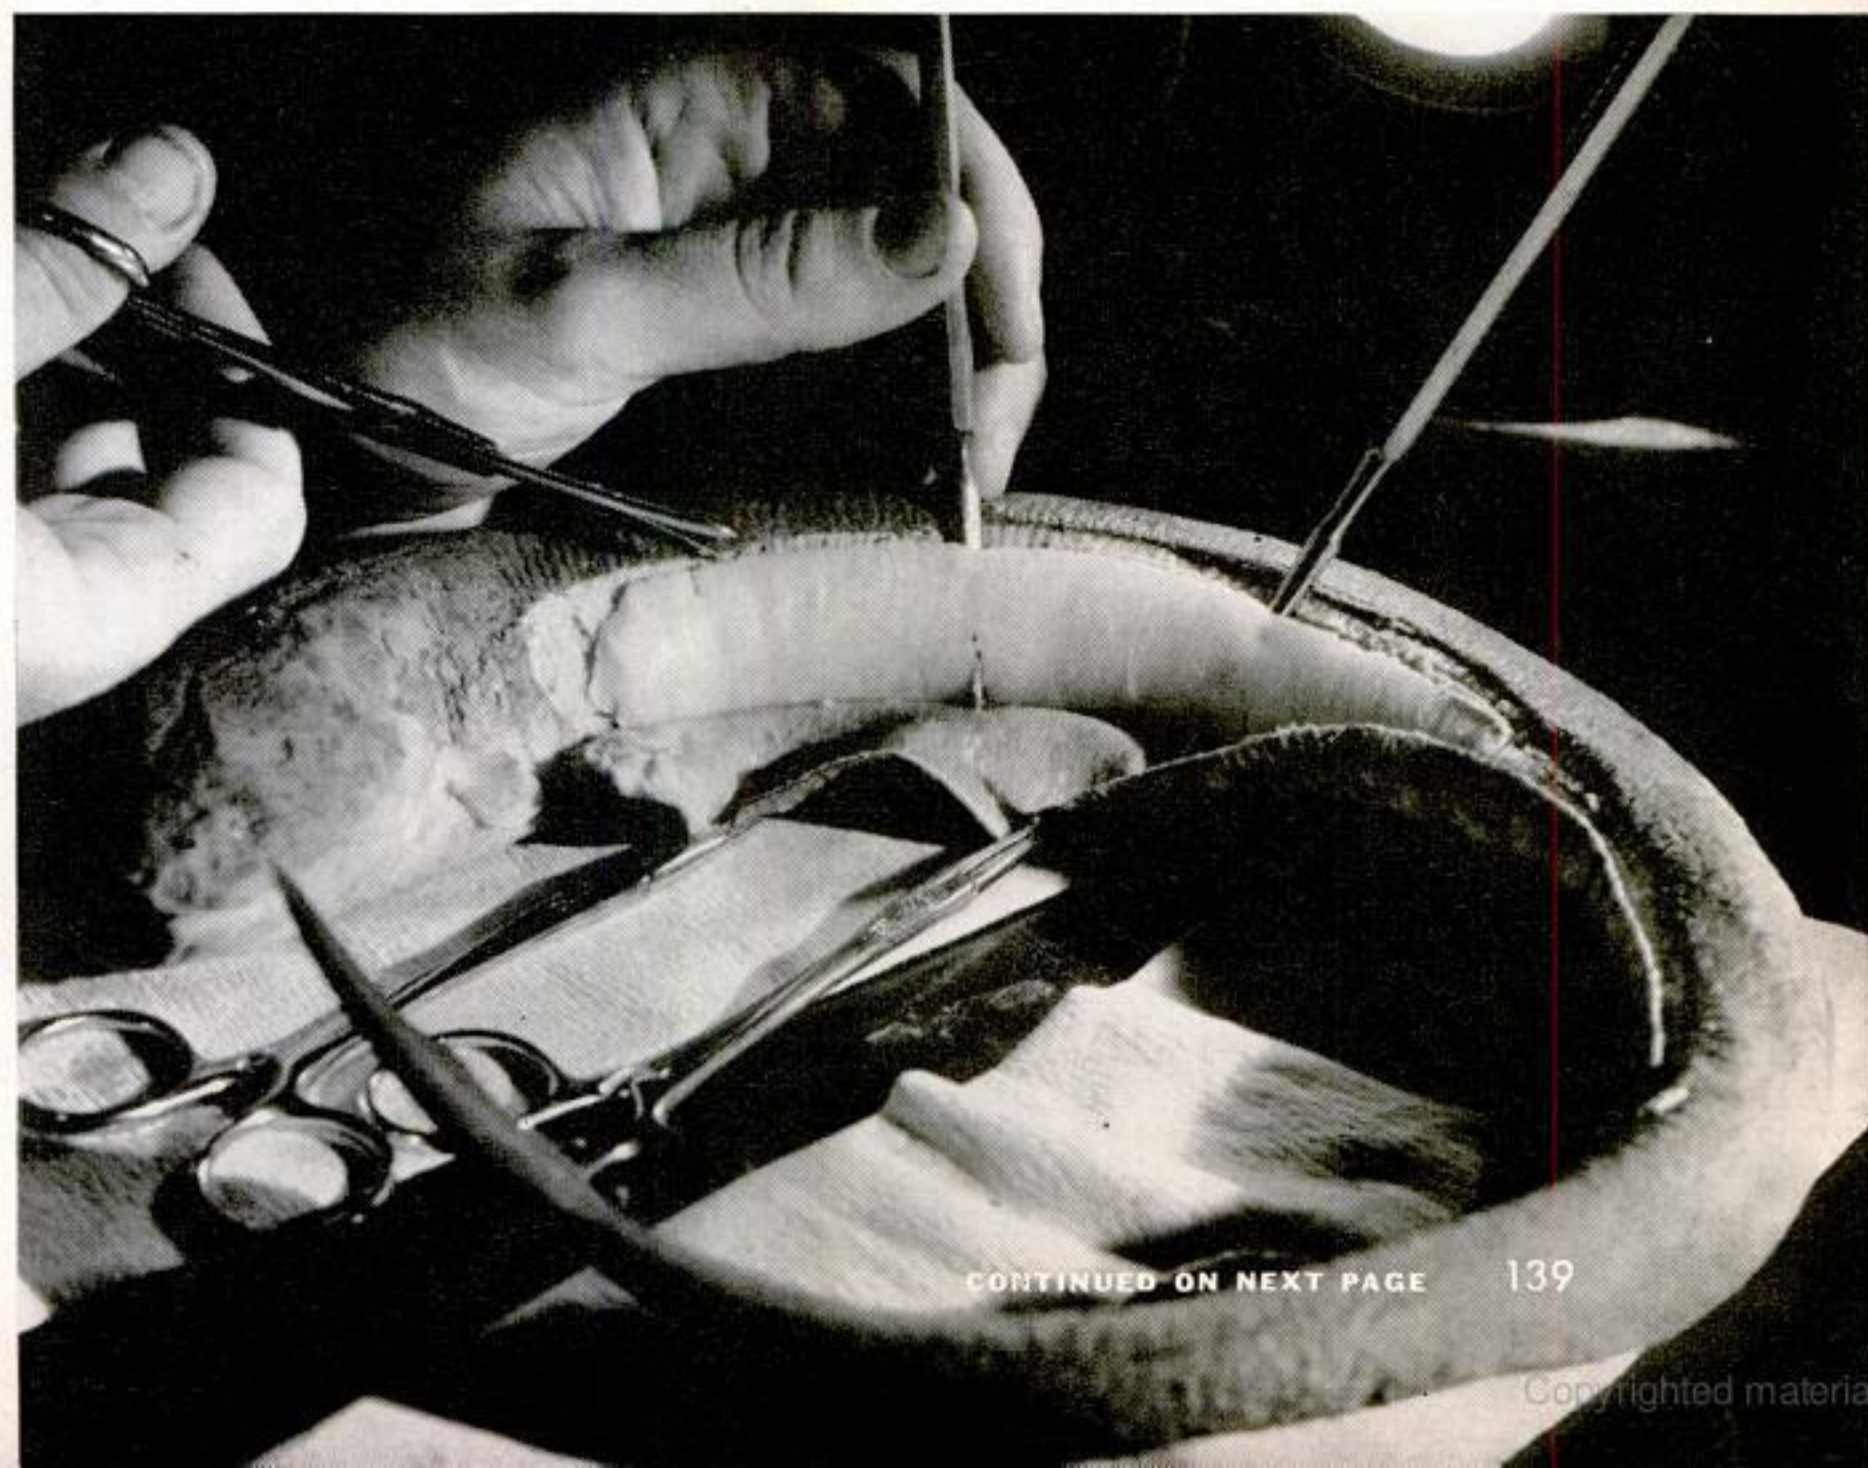

Less spectacular members of the Aquarium colony provide tools for investigation along many other important lines. Recently announced was a successful pregnancy test for human beings, using a species of tropical frog. A promising new lead in cancer research is centered in the familiar home-aquarium platyfish and swordtail, and a demonstration of evolutionary genetics is represented in a colony of blind Mexican cave fish.

Electric generators are the huge nervelike bundles, here shown in cross-section. Electric organs comprise full bulk of tissue, except for kidney-shaped mass of muscle around vertebrae.

BLIND CAVE FISH DEMONSTRATE EVOLUTION

Normal eye of rare Mexican cave fish represents starting point of negative evolution that ends with almost eyeless fish at bottom. This collection, brought from Mexico by Aquarium Director Charles Breder Jr., offers a unique case history in evolution.

Sunken eye, totally blind, represents mid-point in evolution. Because partially blind fish, as above, sought darkness of cave, they became isolated from normal members of species. Through selective mating, thus enforced, defect was accentuated in offspring.

Eye has disappeared under sheath of tissue at end point in evolution. No estimate has been made of generations required but specimens of beginning and end of such a radical evolutionary change have never before been found living contemporaneously.

HYBRID PLATYS PROVIDE NEW CANCER LEAD

Totally black platy, hybrid offspring of a pure-bred platy and a swordtail, is netted by Dr. Myron Gordon of the Aquarium staff, geneticist in this cancer investigation. Black pigmentation in cells is starting point of the process that produces cancers.

Hybrid platy, with large black pigmentation spots, will produce totally cancerous offspring when mated with lightly pigmented, pure-bred platy swimming above. Because cancers can thus be experimentally produced at will, platys are valuable research tool.

Embryos of cancerous hybrid platys, like the one shown above, enlarged 25 times actual size, are being studied to discover point at which heavily pigmented cells mutate into lightly colored, spindle-shaped cells such as are found in human cancers.

Cancerous platy, just beyond the embryo stage, has already been killed by cancer. For years before its cause and nature was suspected this genetically produced cancer be-deviled home-aquarium enthusiasts who kept platys and swordtails in same tank.

Through opera glasses "Cholly Knickerbocker" surveys the audience instead of the stage at New York Ballet

IN THE LIVING ROOM OF HIS NEW YORK APARTMENT, MAURY PAUL CONSULTS HIS DATE BOOK FOR THE EVENING. APARTMENT IS FILLED WITH TAPESTRIES, FAMOUS PAINTINGS

Life Goes Calling on "Cholly Knickerbocker"

Under this pseudonym, sleek, jaunty, fantastic Columnist Maury Paul has made himself a New York legend

"Truly Society is a fickle thing" is a favorite phrase of Cholly Knickerbocker, but there is nothing fickle about Society's devotion to Cholly, America's most famous and highly paid ($50,000 a year) Society columnist. Mention in his columns is something which Cholly, like God, giveth or taketh away. In New York, his intimate chronicles of the activities of New York Society—both the remnants of the old "400" and the brash new Cafe Society which he himself named—keep up a brisk sale for the sensational Hearst-controlled Journal-American. Through the country, Cholly's columns under his real name of Maury H. B. Paul reach 119 newspapers and 5,000,000 spellbound admirers of a gilded Park Avenue that is more glamorous in print than in fact.

If it is not art, Paul's style is rich and distinctive. Paul mothers never expect babies, they "await Sir Stork." Girls are not married, but "transformed into brides." Talk is "chit-chat," large numbers of people "hordes," a lot of money "oodles of ducats." Lush with meaningful quotation marks, he will write: "(So-and-so's) lovely 'ex' has been having what is called a 'time.' I'm so-o-o-o curious!"

Paul has been at this game for 27 years. He is a living encyclopedia of Society history. As his own reporter, legman, proofreader, make-up man and editor, he works hard. His success is based on shrewd psychology. He chides, he humiliates, he insults, but he never tells all he knows. Many socialites, he knows, would rather be attacked than ignored. Then also, they are comforted by the fact that Paul's middle initials stand for "Henry Biddle," which proves that he is one of the elect himself. Not long ago, one of Paul's favorite characters, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, whom he has ribbed for years as "Her Grace," accosted him at a dinner and suggested that they walk out arm-in-arm. "Don't let people think we've been scrapping," she said.

Car Engineers prove AC Spark Plugs on hills that are 12 months long

You'll never drive your car so hard,—or so long. But car engineers do it, day and night. Why? To get for you—among other things—the spark plug that is most reliable, most efficient, most satisfactory.

Out of brutal, killing tests like these comes AC leadership as the spark plugs for new cars and trucks. More AC Spark Plugs are used as factory equipment on new cars and trucks than any other make. And this has been true for the last 14 years.

That is why motorists who wisely follow the lead of car engineers say, "Give me AC's," when their service man suggests replacement of worn plugs.

The Quality Spark Plug

Buick, Cadillac, Chevrolet, Nash, Oldsmobile, and Pontiac motor cars; Chevrolet, Corbitt, Diamond T, Federal, GMC, International, and Sterling trucks; Allis-Chalmers, J. I. Case, Cletrac, and International Harvester tractors . . . these are some of the well-known cars, trucks and tractors which use AC Quality Spark Plugs. Trust your spark plug requirements to the same brand of spark plugs which the leading, big volume manufacturers select.

New AC's every 10,000 miles will more than pay for themselves

How to continue GOOD PLUG PERFORMANCE

Have your Registered AC Cleaning Station check, clean, and regap your spark plugs every 4,000 miles. This service costs only 5c a plug. Clean plugs mean more power—as much as 21% more.

Life Goes Calling (continued)

Every afternoon, Paul works at his Journal-American office. Here he coined some of famous phrases like "Cafe Society," "Glamor Girl" and "Cupid's Graveyard" (Reno).

While messenger waits at 4 a. m., Paul finishes copy at a table in butler's pantry. A hunt-&-peck typist, he feels that shirtsleeves make him kin to the working press.

AT DEB PARTY, A MATRON'S FOND BUSS

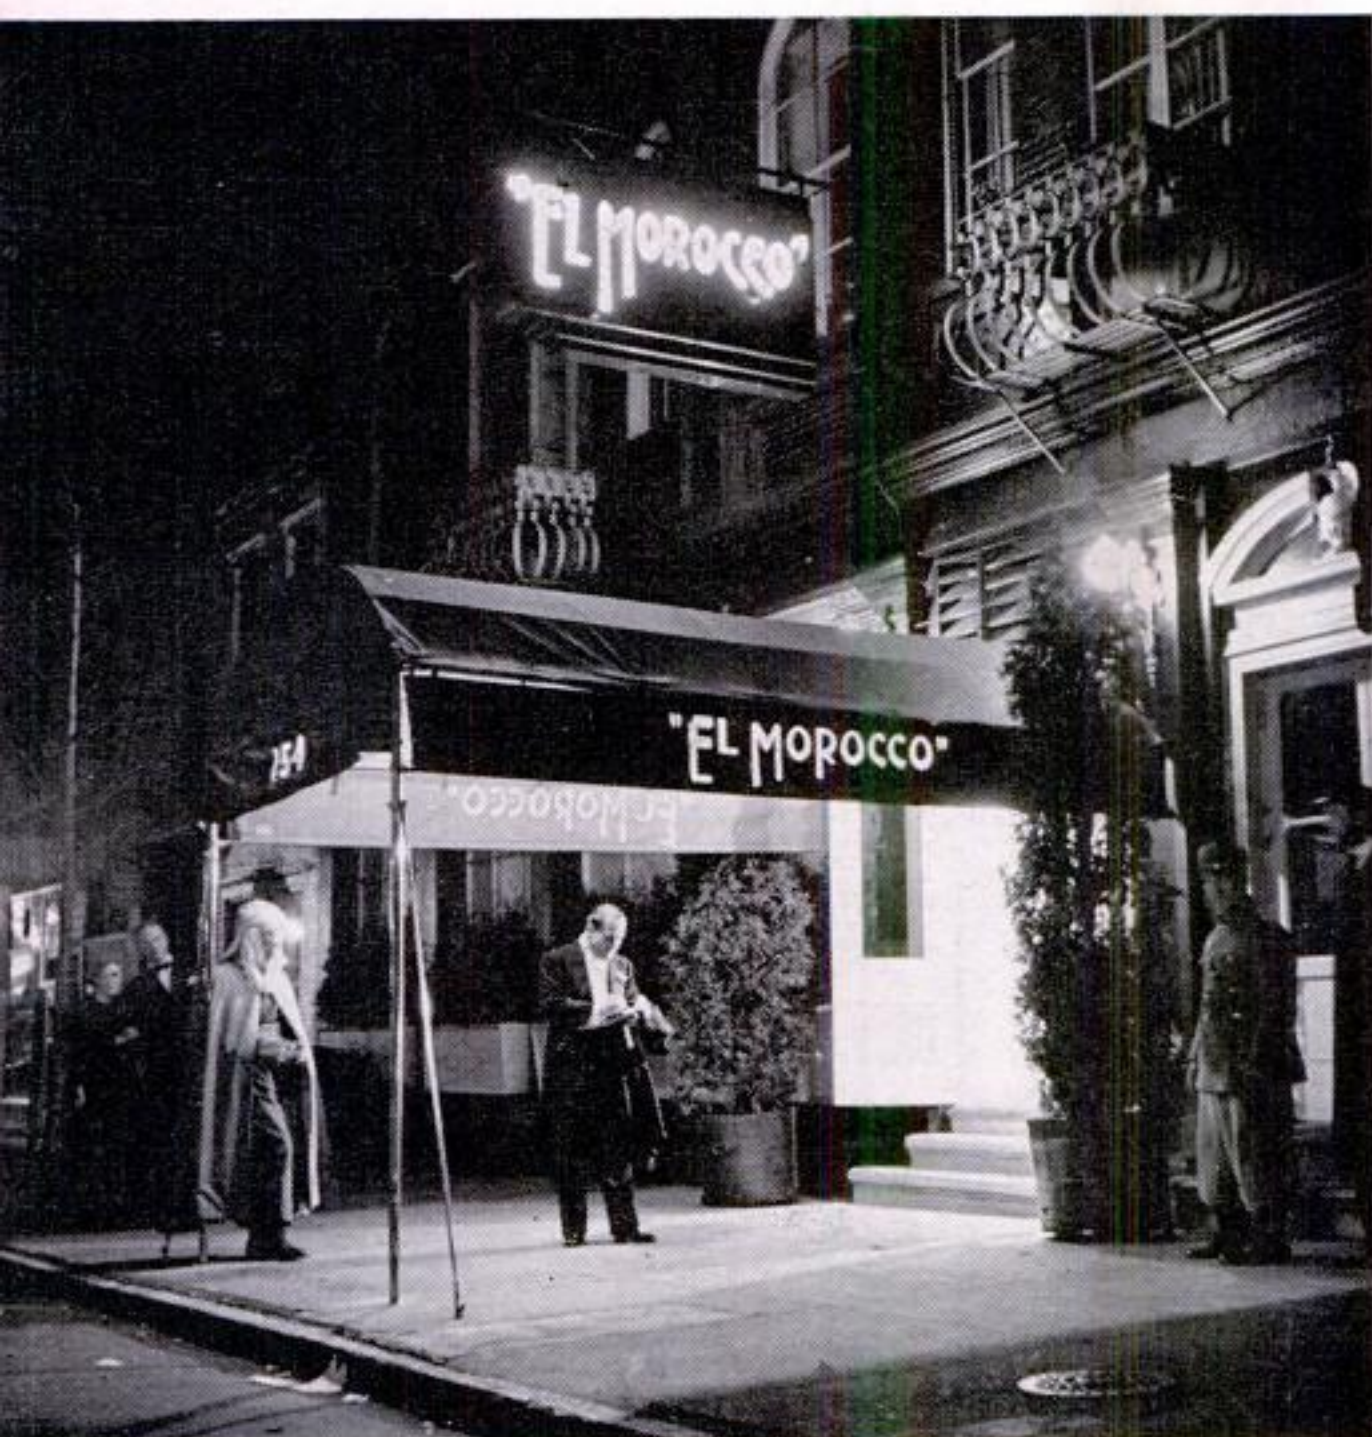

AT EL MOROCCO, HE CHATS

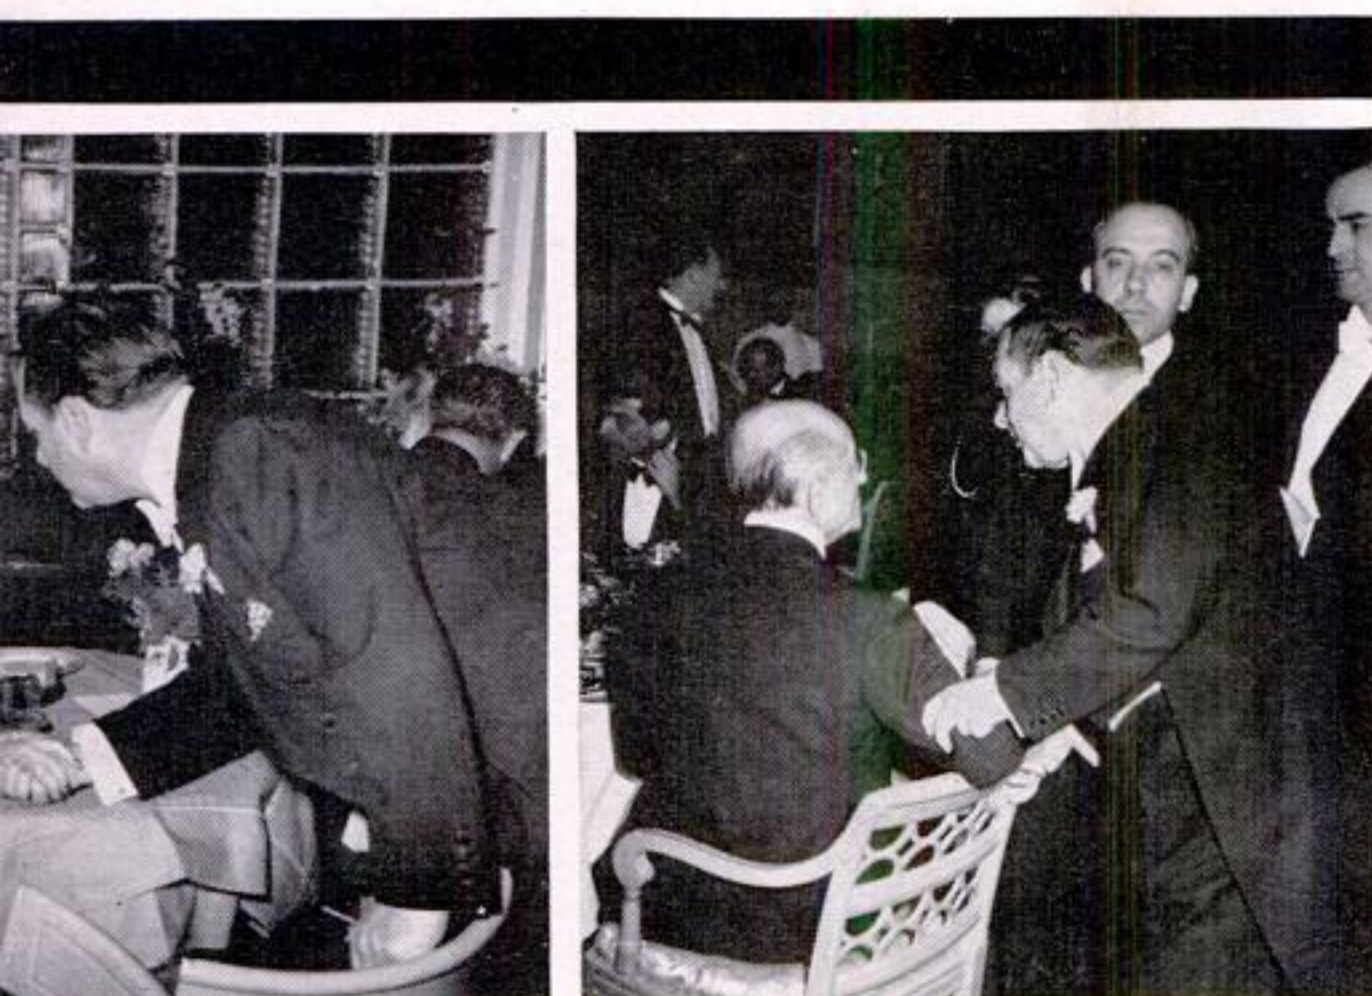

Arriving at the ballet, Paul carries his opera glasses to spot celebrities. He cheerfully admits that he likes those with rich, fruity names like Astor, Tiffany and Vanderbilt.

Freighted with items, Paul bids goodnight to doorman at El Morocco who is known only as "Bon Soir." Unlike many columnists, Paul pays his checks, never drinks.

The $1.00 ANTI-FREEZE with "RESERVE PROTECTION"

READ THESE 3 VITAL FACTS!

- 1... Automobile engineers emphasize that the boiling point of an anti-freeze solution is all-important. Because the more anti-freeze used, the more chance of boil-away.
- 2... Modern motors develop a heat of 180°. So engineers warn not to use solutions that boil at less than 180°.

SOLDIER'S SOCK

Sirs:

Army regulations pretty well cover a soldier's entire mode of living. Some rules even extend right down to a man's big toe, such as the one we have here about keeping our socks neatly folded and packed. The Army doesn't care how you go about folding your socks, just so the final product is compact like the one shown in the lower right frame below. Most of us have adopted a standard method for achieving this result. The rest of the pictures give a step-by-step record of the process. It's simple if you study it out. First you lay the standard sock out flat, crease the top and heel, then fold it toe to top as shown. Roll the sock tightly toward the folded top—fold the top again so as to cover the roll and there's your sock! Perhaps your civilian readers can utilize this method to economize bureau drawer space.

OIL-CAN DECOY

Sirs:

Tommy Graham of Salisbury recently utilized a new hitch-hiking technique to effect a transcontinental thumbing jaunt in 13 days. Motorists' first sight of him was that of a young lift-seeker apparently carrying an oil can to a stalled automobile. Tommy got rides quickly. Once in the seat beside a benefactor, Tommy would open his "oil can" to disclose a well-stocked traveling kit. The kit holds three pairs of trousers, three shirts and a supply of underwear, socks and toilet articles.

MONKEY PINE

Sirs:

Here's a bit of nature's own artistry as it appeared on a board cut from a Georgia pine at the local Central Sash and Door Co. plant. Elbert Fields, shop superintendent, noticed the monkey-face formation and kept it as support for his theory that the tree in its infancy was frightened by a monkey.

Use Ivory Snow's
rich suds each day."
—Miss Ivory Snow

How NEW IVORY SNOW care guards against acid perspiration... how your stockings can last up to 1/3 longer

• Those weakened fibres that open the way to stocking runs—here is a frequently hidden cause that has mystified thousands of women: It is acid perspiration. The normal human body gives off over a pint of it daily, winter and summer. And it can eat away stocking life.

To help your stockings give longer wear, avoid carelessness in washing—turn to this daily Ivory Snow care. Ivory Snow is something new in "fine fabrics" soaps. Ivory-pure. Made in "snowdrop" form, to give rich suds in 3 seconds, even in cool water.

Tests show that daily Ivory Snow care can help you get up to 1/3 longer wear—it's like getting a new pair of stockings free every 2 months! Undies, too, look and last better under this gentle, safe care.

Only Ivory Snow Combines Both These Advantages

1. Pure soap made in tiny "snowdrop" form...
2. Dissolves in a jiffy... just a little Ivory Snow bursts into pure, rich suds in 3 seconds, even in cool water!

No wonder Ivory Snow acts so quickly, so surely, so safely against dangerous acid perspiration... to help stockings last far longer.

TURKEYS ON PARADE

Sirs:

Poultry-farm owners in this section of southern Minnesota pride themselves on the number and quality of their turkeys. Once each year they parade their flocks' proudest and fattest turkeys through the main street of Worthington. The first photo below shows the turkeys executing a military "column right." In the second picture a pair of white and a pair of black matched turkeys are drawing a small, gaily decorated float.

TERRIFIED RAT

Sirs:

All is not as chummy as it looks in this extraordinary scene of a cat and a rat staring at one another. The encounter took place in the middle of a downtown street and was witnessed by many persons. The cat had already bullied the rat exhaustingly. The rat attempted to escape, became frightened at seeing the ring of onlookers and whirled in confusion, only to find itself nose-to-nose with its tormentor. The cat killed the rat after roughing it for about 30 minutes.

1. "Whack!—and the ash was flicked from my cigarette by a tough-looking hombre's bull whip!" writes a friend. "If you think I wasn't startled, you're wrong! You're also wrong if the picture leads you to believe this disturbance took place in Spain—it all happened in Riverside, California!"

"You see—I went there for a non-participating spectator's view of the annual D'Anza Days Festival. But I'd no sooner arrived than I was grabbed, manhandled into a Spanish costume, given a sword—and told to 'use it!'"

3. "The next minute—I was being backed against the wall like the villain in a movie! Believe me—I thought I must have committed some unpardonable sin! Unaware that I was being 'ribbed'—I fully expected to be run through!"

4. "After this sword play, and the ashes-off-the-cigarette stunt with the bull whip, I was ready to take the next plane back to New York..."

5. "Suddenly my friend laughed—and ordered Canadian Club Old-Fashioneds. The moment I tasted that famous flavor—all was forgiven! P.S.—I had the time of my life!"

Why have so many Americans switched to Canadian Club lately? Because of its unique, delightful flavor. No other whisky in all the world tastes like Canadian Club. Canadian Club is light as Scotch—rich as rye—satisfying as bourbon; and you can stick with it all evening long—in cocktails before dinner and tall ones after.

That's why Canadian Club is the largest-selling imported whisky in the United States (and in Scotland, too!).
